U. S. Lottery Today Calls First Draft Contingent

President to Open Ceremony at Noon; Stimson Will Draw First Number

Biggest Board Split Up

LOCAL BOARD 13, the largest in the Nation, is split to divide a list of 8,537 registrants, and the Commissioners make six new board appointments. Page 14.

Today's Drawings

For the second time in a quarter century, this Nation today will decide by lot which of its young men shall first be called to take up arms to train for its defense.

Shortly after noon, in the Labor Department Auditorium, Secretary of War Stimson will draw a blue capsule from a tall glass jar. The capsule will be opened, the number it contains broadcast, recorded on a sound tape, copied on a blackboard on the auditorium platform and photographed for a permanent record.

That number will decide what men between 21 and 35 in cities, towns and hamlets throughout the country will be called first for a year's training in the new United States Army.

At noon, President Roosevelt will open the lottery with a six-minute address. Outside, 500 men who fought in that last war will be on parade—men from a dozen States, from all organizations of World War veterans. Army planes will drone overhead while the solemn ceremony begins inside.

The bowl will be the same used 23 years ago to select thousands of young men to go out to battle. The capsules will be stirred with the same wooden paddle used at that time. Except for the radio, the Morgenthau Answers G.O.P.

Saying he was answering Republican criticism of the Administration's defense effort, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau declared yesterday that the Army's 5,500-plane program and the Navy's 3,000-plane program will be completed "well ahead of schedule."

The Cabinet member limited his statement to these "first installment" programs, declining to be drawn into a discussion of how soon the Nation may expect completion of the full program for 25,000 Army planes and 10,000 Navy craft.

The Army's 5,500 warbirds will be ready by April 1, three months ahead of schedule, Morgenthau said. The Navy's 3,000 craft, he told newsmen, will be available "well ahead" of the ships and shore bases for which they are intended.

The Treasury Secretary made his statement, he said, in answer to Tomorrow's Post will list the names and addresses of men living in Washington and its suburbs whose numbers place them among those subject to call in the first year of selective service.

Roosevelt Lays Arms Lag to G.O.P.; Willkie Cites '2-Term Law'

'New Deal Kidnapers'

(Willkie's Text, Page 7.)

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Louisville, Oct. 28.—Wendell Willkie tonight selected this border State for his supreme bid for Democratic votes, and told Kentuckians that the Democratic Party has been stifled by the President "and a little group of men in large part unknown to our people."

The "rash and overbearing" party of the New Deal has "kidnaped" the Democratic Party, he charged,

Willkie to Answer Roosevelt Today

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—The Republican National Committee announced tonight that Wendell Willkie would reply in a Nationwide broadcast tomorrow to President Roosevelt's Madison Square Garden address.

Willkie will speak over the C. B. S. network from 3:15 to 3:30 p. m., from his special train at Parkersburg, W. Va.

and has forsworn all of its traditional principles.

He alone in the field represents basic Democratic ideals, he said, and he enjoined the people of Louisville: "You can not be a Democrat and vote for the third-term candidate."

The one-time Democrat, who has been laying more and more emphasis on his bipartisan associates, was lustily cheered by a crowd of 17,000 that packed the county armory and 5,000 outside, after he had addressed his last campaign appeal to the Illinois and Indiana cornbelt, core of Republican election hopes.

Slogan "Unite and Serve"

In Indianapolis, 65,000 Hoosiers cheered his "homecoming" and choked a sensational speech out of the husky-voiced candidate. From Bloomington, Champaign and Danville, Ill., to Columbus, Ind., he had spread his predictions of victory, his slogan, "Unite and Serve" and his warnings against involvement in war.

Tonight in Louisville he was speaking in a State only narrowly Democratic; it was to old line democracy he addressed his appeal.

Time and again he mentioned Democratic stalwarts like John Garner, Carter Glass, Senator Byrd and Senator Tydings and said they, too, had fought against concentration of power in the New Deal "group of unbelieving and ambitious men."

He called the two term tradition American "common law," and said repudiation of it may mean the end of the two-party system.

(Roosevelt's Text, Page 6.)

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

New York, Oct. 28.—President Roosevelt told a wildly cheering throng at Madison Square Garden tonight that the Republican Party is "playing politics with our national security."

Apparently unwearied by a hectic 78-mile trip through New York and environs today, he drew continuous laughter and applause from his audience of 25,000 as he attacked "the responsible political leadership of the Republican Party."

Recalling the statements and the voting history of Republicans in Congress, Mr. Roosevelt denounced "their record of sabotage of this Administration's continual effort to increase our defenses to meet the dangers that loomed ever larger upon the horizon."

The President, in fighting mood that electrified his listeners, branded as "false" Republican charges that American rearmament is "slow," "hamstrung," or "impeded."

"Alternative" Stressed

Reviewing the Administration's foreign policy, he asked for support of "this type of affirmative realistic fight" for peace. "The alternative," he said, "is to risk the future of the country in the hands of those with

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Two sisters accused of throwing an onion, an egg and a lemon from the top of a Brooklyn building at President Roosevelt were arrested today on disorderly conduct charges.

They gave their names as Italia d'Arbe, 21, a houseworker, and Mary d'Arbe, 17, a typist, both unemployed. Italia said:

World's Largest U-Boat Fleet Projected by Nazis, U. S. Hears

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Germany now has in service or under construction probably the largest submarine fleet ever projected, information received by naval authorities here reveals.

The Reich now has an estimated 120 U-boats in operation and 180 building, it is shown, an unprecedented total for any navy, and just double the submarine force which Hitler was credited by the world to have in service or under construction only five months ago.

Comparative figures on the world's leading navies made public here yesterday disclose this startling fact among other important developments of the effect of the first year of the war on existing fleets and building programs.

Only the data as to the American Navy is official, but the information as to the other powers is the best available to naval experts here and is believed to be reasonably accurate.

Conquered France, by these estimates, is shown to possess a fleet consisting of 1 battleship, 1 aircraft carrier, 14 cruisers, 50 destroyers and 62 submarines, a by no means inconsequential force if added to the Axis fleet, but considerably less formidable than at the time

Franco Consents To Land Drive On Gibraltar, London Hears

By the United Press

London, Oct. 28.—German troops are preparing to move through Spain as part of an impending Axis "nutcracker" offensive at both ends of the Mediterranean, according to reports circulating in diplomatic circles tonight.

[The Associated Press said unconfirmed rumors were heard in Berlin that German troops are about to cross or have already crossed the Pyrennes into Spain—presumably for an attack on Britain's stronghold at Gibraltar.

[Reports have been rife that such a thrust by Germany would coincide with an Italian campaign at the eastern end of the Mediterranean.]

Information from Madrid to several embassies in London said Gen. Franco, of Spain, has agreed to let Nazi troops traverse Spain.

This consent, contrary to earlier reports, was said to have been granted after Adolf Hitler agreed to give a part of French Morocco to Spain under the Axis "new order."

Spain Remains Calm

Copyright by New York Times

Madrid, Oct. 28.—Spain continued completely calm today and the Spanish press also continued its silence.

Out of all the discussions in regard to the new extension of war, the only provocative statement was in the newspaper Pueblo, which declared that the Balkans had been quiet until the British minister of war, Anthony Eden, went there "with intentions not well known but easily suspected."

Varela Off to Africa

Madrid (Tuesday), Oct. 29 (AP).—Gen. Jose Varela, Spanish war minister, has flown to Cabo Yubi, Rio de Oro, in Africa, on a trip believed closely connected with the recent conversations between Adolf Hitler and Spain's chief of state, Gen. Francisco Franco, it was learned today.

Gen. Varela may extend his flight also to the Canary Islands off the African mainland.

No official statement was issued on the unexpected trip.

Duce Expects To Take Whole Of Country In Three Weeks

By the United Press

Rome, Oct. 28.—Germany will "intervene immediately" if Turkey or any other Mediterranean nation attempts to aid Greece in repulsing Italy's invasion, Fascist quarters said tonight after a meeting of Adolf Hitler and Premier Mussolini at Florence.

Mussolini was said in Fascist military circles to be confident that his forces will be able to occupy all of Greece within three weeks, even though the Greeks may refuse to capitulate.

[Neutral diplomats in Belgrade reported Germany was preparing to attack Turkey, through Rumania and Bulgaria, as soon as Italy's invading forces have established a strangle-hold on Greece, the United Press said.

Bulgarians Make Way

[The pro-German military hierarchy of Bulgaria was said to be hastily preparing the way for the German drive down to the Dardanelles. All Bulgarian airports are in charge of Nazi ground crews, large numbers of planes are arriving from the Reich and hundreds of Bulgarian pilots are being trained by the Germans, it was reported.

[The Axis plan of conquest of the Near East was described as aimed at the Dardanelles, and Hitler and Mussolini were said to have fixed a time-table calling for the capture of Istanbul by December 1.

[The plan was said to have been mapped at the dictators Brenner Pass meeting on October 4 and to have been developed further today at Florence.]

Zero Hour at Dawn

Authoritative quarters here said Italy today merely had "marked time" to give Athens full opportunity to submit but that at dawn tomorrow the full force of Il Duce's war machine will be unleashed.

These quarters said parachutists would drop from Italian transport lanes to occupy many of Greece's thousands of Aegean Islands, and added that convoys of Italian soldiers were moving . . . (at this point the Italian censor interrupted tele-

Rebels Fight Mexican Army

By Jack O'Brine
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Mexico City, Oct. 28.—Fighting between federal troops and rebels was reported tonight out in the State of Chiapas, near the Guatemalan border, where opponents of the Cardenas administration claimed to have 1,600 men under arms. Government sources had "no knowledge of an uprising."

Almazanista leaders said the movement against the government had started at midnight last night and had spread during the day. It was aimed they said at blocking the installation of Gen. Manuela Avila Camacho as president on December 1.

The defeated presidential candidate, Gen. Juan Andreu Almazan, who is in the United States, was said to have been informed of the movement, which climaxed a series of unsuccessful attempts by his followers to foment a major rebellion in other parts of Mexico since the disputed July 7 election.

Opposition spokesmen said here tonight that 26,000 men in five other Mexican states were ready to oppose the government when the right moment arrived. It was understood that the call to arms would depend upon the success or failure of the movement in Chiapas.

The fighting, although not officially confirmed, was believed to have occurred when rebels tried to seize army garrisons in a region thickly populated with Germans, reputedly sympathetic to the oppositionist cause or any other cause that would create trouble in Mexico.

Soviets Watch War Silently

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Oct. 28.—The Soviet government watched closely the Italian attack on Greece today and the public heard all about it from the Moscow radio, but there was no indication of the Kremlin's reaction.

Without comment, the radio devoted virtually its entire program to the Balkan developments. These were based largely on American press accounts.

Foreign observers expressed belief the Italo-Greek conflict would fail to alter immediately the Russian neutrality policy.

Indications that this policy has been carried further were seen today in an audience at which the new Japanese Ambassador, Yoshitsugu Tatekawa, presented his credentials to President Kalinin. Indications were lacking, however, of any immediate conclusion of a

Time Bomb Found

Plot to Blow Up Troopship Foiled, U. S. Sailors Claim

By the Associated Press

Panama, Panama, Oct. 28.—Crew members on the United States troop transport Republic said tonight that an attempt to blow up the ship with a time bomb had been frustrated soon after the ship left San Francisco for the Canal Zone.

The story as related by the crew awaiting transit to the Atlantic here was that H. F. Dodd, master of arms on the Republic, which was loaded with 3,000 troops and passengers, detected a "queer smell" just out of San Francisco, and discovered a smoking box stowed away among other objects in the last hold.

Dodd found a "time-bomb" in the box which members of the crew said held enough nitro-glycerine—some said two quarts—to have blown the ship "clear out of the water."

Dodd, they said, picked up the box and, "praying all the way" made his way to the decks where a member of the crew helped him toss the bomb overboard.

Very few of the passengers, troops or crewmen were aware "how close they were to disaster," these informants said.

U. S. Prepares To 'Freeze' Greek Credits

American Ships Will Be Barred From New Combat Zone

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

The United States prepared yesterday to "freeze" Greek wealth in this country, and apply provisions of the neutrality law to cover American relations with that invaded country.

Officially, this country had no word from the Balkans, but State Department officials had prepared the necessary proclamations and executive orders to conform to the new neutrality statutes.

Meanwhile, reports in diplomatic circles that the Department had received word that Turkey would go to the aid of Greece were denied officially. It was said definitely that no word at all had been received from Turkey up to last night, and very meager reports had come from Greece.

Although no flag flew from his legation yesterday, the Greek Minister, Cimon P. Diamantopoulos, said he was confident of eventual Greek victory.

"We had to defend our homes and our independence," he said, with visible emotion.

"I feel sure that public opinion in great and free America backs wholeheartedly the Greek people in their struggle for freedom.

M. Diamontopoulos estimated that there are between 40,000 and 50,000 Greek citizens in the United States, and between 600,000 and 700,000 American citizens of Greek origin.

The belief was also current in diplomatic circles that Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, both neighbors of Greece, would not enter the conflict. Germany and Yugoslavia recently signed a trade agreement pledging greater amounts of Yugoslav products to the Third Reich. German and Italian diplomats have

British Assure Greece of All Possible Aid

'We Will Share A United Victory,' Churchill Declares

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 28.—Great Britain threw her war-geared resources behind Greece tonight and King George VI and Prime Minister Churchill personally assured the little Italian-invaded kingdom that the British would send every possible help.

"We are with you in this struggle," said the King's message to King George II of Greece.

"Your cause is our cause—we shall be fighting a common foe.

"There are doubtless hard trials to be borne but we shall both meet them in the firm faith that ultimate victory is assured by the ever-increasing strength of free peoples. We may hope, indeed, that we are already near the turn of the tide when the power of the aggressor will begin to ebb and our own growing might to prevail."

Answer Appeals

Churchill conveyed his assurances to Greece's Premier Metaxas, indicating the British intend to redeem promptly their 1939 pledge to assist Greece against attack.

"We will give you all help in our power," Churchill said. "We fight a common foe and we will share a united victory."

The prime minister expressed the British people's admiration for the way in which the Greek people had withstood Italian "threats and intimidations" and declared the "same qualities will uphold them in their present hour of trial."

These messages were quick answers to appeals from Greece for aid, dispatched a short time after Italian troops marched into Greece from Albania.

Great Britain on April 13, 1939, assured both Greece and Rumania that she would help them resist aggression. That pledge followed by a few days the Good Friday

Chinese Retake Strategic City, Rupture of Blockade Forecast

By the Associated Press

Hongkong (Tuesday), Oct. 29.—Chinese army spokesmen today announced recapture of Nanning, strategic communications center in Kwangsi province which the Japanese said they were abandoning yesterday.

The Central Chinese News Agency reported that other Chinese successes in Kwangsi included recapture of the border town of Lungchow, near French Indo-China, and Mingkiang, east of Lungchow.

Japanese forces are retreating at three points toward French Indo-China, the agency declared.

Responsible Chinese quarters here described the Japanese withdrawal from Nanning, first provincial capital retaken by the Chinese in three years of war, as indicative of serious Japanese weakness.

The abandonment of Nanning confirmed hitherto unpublished foreign military information that the Japanese drive into Indo-China September 22 was rather a face-saving retreat from Kwangsi Province than a spontaneous attack on the French colony by impatient troops of the South China Japanese army.

These reports disclosed that the Japanese had tough problems in Kwangsi for many months, with at least 30 per cent of the soldiers suffering from fever, malaria and dysentry, while supplies were increasingly difficult to obtain with total

By the Associated Press

Greek mountaineer troops, outnumbered but craftily placed, reported early today they were clinging stubbornly to the Metaxas Line, staving off the growing fury of Italian attacks on the newest warfront.

As real war came to the long-apprehensive Balkans, the Greeks took heart from British naval help on both sides of their peninsula.

Athens Cooly Awaits Bombs

Athens, as yet unbombed, cooly awaited the appearance of Italian warplanes.

A Greek army communique said Italian air raids on military objectives—the ports of Pireeus and Patras—did no damage, and that the Italian attacks on the craggy northwest border with Albania were resisted with such courage that the fighting was localized to the border line.

Meager reports from the frontier indicated that the striking force of some 200,000 Italians (twice the number of the Greek defenders) was surprisingly weak and that Greek resistance astonished the attackers.

Albanian Revolt Spreads

[A rapidly spreading Albanian rebellion against Italian rule was reported to be crippling the Fascist invasion, the United Press said in a Belgrade dispatch. Albanian guerrilla rebels were said to be attacking the advancing Italian columns from the rear with rifles and hand grenades.

[Italians denied there was any revolt in Albania, asserting the noises Yugoslav border observers interpreted as fighting was merely the sound of Albanians cheering Italian troops marching to the front.

[The Italian spearhead, however, was reported to be about ten miles deep into Greek territory, in the Ciamuria district near the town of

Turks Prefer War to Shame

Ankara, Turkey (Tuesday), Oct. 29 (AP).—The Ankara government newspaper Ulus, commenting as Turkey kept close watch on the Italian invasion of Greece, declared today that "we prefer the hell of war to a dishonorable peace."

The editorial appeared as the Turkish republic celebrated its seventeenth birthday still undecided whether to join its ally, Britain, in aiding its neighbor and ally, Greece, to resist the Italians.

[Persistent reports were heard in other Balkan capitals that Turkish troops were entering—or had entered—eastern Thrace, presumably to assist the Greeks, and that a Turkish declaration of war was imminent. The New York Times' Belgrade correspondent, however, traced these rumors to German sources—a fact which gave strength

Greeks Hold Own, Albanians Revolt

Defenders Surprised By Weakness of Fascist Attack

Kanlspu. The Italian forces were said, however, to have been thrown back except at two points.]

A British report said Greek troops, at one point, broke through the Italian line and drove eight miles into Italian-subjugated Albania. The Greek communique did not mention such an incident, however.

Neutral military attaches in Belgrade said the Italian invasion showed a lack of striking power.

Rome Expected Submission

It was said Rome apparently expected Greece to submit without a fight to the Italian ultimatum, which was handed to Greek Premier-Dictator John Metaxas at 3 a. m. Monday (8 p. m. E.S.T., Sunday) with a three-hour time limit. Greece promptly declared war.

Greek defenders held the invasion back along the entire length of the frontier and Fascist forces are fighting furiously in an effort to break through mountain passes leading into Greece, a neutral military attache reported to Belgrade by telephone from Athens.

Attack "Remarkably Light"

Italian air attacks accompanying the land thrusts were "remarkably light," this informant said, and caused only little damage. The fighting apparently raged without letup and firing could be heard plainly during the night from the southernmost tip of Yugoslavia.

(Military analysts in other Balkan countries shook their heads and said the Greek mainland was in danger of being overrun within a week due to the vast inferiority—125 planes to several thousand—of the Greek air force.)

Latest reports from Patras listed the day's air raid casualties at 50 civilians dead and more than 100 wounded.

British Occupy Crete

The British navy, hastening to make good on the British pledge to Greece and to protect its own valued stages in the eastern Mediterranean, moved up on both sides of the Greek Peninsula, steaming under forced draft from Egyptian waters.

British landing parties were said to have occupied the island of Crete, southeast of the Greek mainland, and another small island off Corfu.

[The United Press quoted unconfirmed Athens reports that British troops had landed also at Salonika, Greek port and naval base 15 miles east of the Albanian frontier, and reputedly the major Italian objective.

[Another British landing party was reported to have occupied the Island of Kephalonia, west of Athens in the Gulf of Corinth. Italian attempts to bomb the Corinth Canal, cut through the narrow isthmus which links Peloponnesus to the mainland, were said to have been repulsed.]

Turks Reported in Thrace

A sharp naval clash, presumably between British and Italian warcraft, was reported to have preceded the landings at Crete and near Corfu.

Greece's own fleet was guarding the upper Aegean, massed, by prearrangement, off Saloniki. It consists of a cruiser, 14 destroyers, 13 torpedo boats, 6 submarines and 8 minelayers.

For 15 minutes Metaxas talked by telephone with President Inonu of Turkey, which, with Greece, is the only state in Europe still tied to Britain.

Nazis Reported in Fight

Greece had little or no hope for help from Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, both of them under the Axis thumb. She faced, in fact, the possibility of German attack through Rumania and Bulgaria, for Rumania is crowded with German troops and there were reports that German soldiers already were fighting with the Italians. Metaxas, however, conferred at length with Yugoslav officials.

Then he ordered general mobilization, swelling Greece's small army to some 600,000 regulars and reservists, and followed this up with a "political mobilization" of all business and industry.

Gen. Alexander Papagos, Greek chief of staff, was named by King George II as generalissimo, while the monarch himself assumed supreme command of all armed forces.

In Sofia, King Boris told his parliament that Bulgaria "will continue by all means to preserve peace and defend her vital interests."

In Belgrade, official statements said Yugoslavia would remain neutral. Troops with full war equipment marched through Belgrade, and extreme nervousness prevailed that Germany might demand troop passage.

Yugoslavia Neutral

Yugoslav and German official sources both denied such permission had been requested.

The Belgrade government announced Yugoslavia was "neutral."

Premier Dragisa Cvetkovic canceled an emergency meeting of the cabinet because the "situation has not reached the point where a cabinet decision is required."

The premier conferred with Vice Premier Vladimir Macek, War and Navy Minister Gen. Milan Nedic, Foreign Minister Aleksander Cincar-Markovic, Prince Paul, and the Turkish minister.

Yugoslavia's southern border, which drives a wedge between Albania and Greece, was the scene of heavy troop concentrations.

Defense measures also were taken on the northern frontier with Germany. All leaves were canceled, but it was said mobilization was not immediately in prospect.

All the Balkan nations were apprehensive lest the Italian invasion touch off the long-dreaded general conflagration in southeast Europe.

Kremlin Holds Key

Russia appeared to be the key.

At a nod from Moscow, Turkey presumably would rush to the aid of Greece. Russia might feel her own interests in southeast Europe were endangered by the new Axis thrust—particularly any move to seize the Dardanelles—and resolve that the time is ripe for an open break with Germany.

Wild excitement engulfed Athens. Crowds sacked the Italian steamship and airline offices, ripped down Italian flags and surged through the streets shouting:

"Down with Italy!"

Italians, Germans Jailed

King George II and Dictator Metaxas were cheered as they drove through the capital, and shortly thereafter Metaxas ordered general mobilization, swelling Greece's small army to an estimated 600,000 men. Business and industry also were mobilized. All Italians and Germans were jailed.

Fascist raiders bombed the Corinth and Tatoi airdromes, 12 miles from Athens, killing four and wounded 17, and also attacked the 2,500-year-old port of Piraeus, 4 miles south of Athens.

Four Planes Reported Felled

[Two Italian planes were said to have been shot down in the raid on Kastoria and two others were said to have been brought down in flames over Athens, The United Press reported from Belgrade.

[Yugoslav frontier dispatches told of bloody fighting northwest of Perati along the frontier, particularly around the Greek town of Melisopetra, to which the Italians were said to have driven and then been hurled back by a Greek counter-attack that took an estimated 100 Italian and 100 Greek casualties.

[About 20 Greek soldiers were reported killed in a battle at the village of Ladaniste, near the Greek town of Kostur, where the Italians also advanced some distance, only to be thrown back again to the village of Kopestica.

Prasca in Command

[Another clash was reported in the Ciamuria district, near the city of Kacispoli, where Italian troops earlier had advanced toward Sajai and Fatiri and been halted by Greek defenses after losing an estimated 15 dead and 70 wounded.

[In taking the towns of Bobiho and Radoti the Italians were said to have lost 180 to 200 dead and wounded and to have been repulsed when they attempted to capture nearby Kursaka.

[The commander in chief of the invading Italian forces was identified as Gen. Visconto Prasca, aided by the chief of the Fascist organization in Albania, Pietro Parini.]

Hitler's Fall Offensive Appears to Be Hand-Shaking

HARVEST TIME—Marshal Philippe Petain (left), France's aged Chief of State, who, last spring, would have matched Hitler shell for shell, shakes hands with Der Fuehrer at their meeting in surrendered French territory October 24. Between them stands Dr. Paul Schmidt, Hitler's interpreter. After this meeting came the announcement that Hitler and Petain had agreed on a policy of collaboration for "peace in Europe." Today, Hitler's Axis partner wages war on another independent nation.

Laval Puts Off Broadcast to Meet Germans; Discussions Will Bear Fruit This Week

By the Associated Press

Vichy, France, Oct. 28.—Vice Premier Laval, his deputy dictatorship of France strengthened by his appointment as foreign minister, was en route to Paris tonight for "important discussions" expected to bear fruit this week.

Presumably he will confer with German officials about aligning France with the Rome-Berlin Axis for "peace in Europe."

Already vice president of the council, officially designated as Petain's successor, chief of information and radio, and official negotiator with Germany, Laval took over the foreign ministry. Former Foreign Minister Paul Baudouin became secretary of state to the presidency council.

Broadcast Called Off

After first scheduling a broadcast to explain France's commitments with the Axis powers, Laval changed his plans, officials said, and will give an interview to Paris newspapers instead.

Government spokesmen said "the choice has now been made," that Frenchmen must accept it and that no criticism would be accepted.

[In Washington, the French Embassy said: "There is no foundation to rumors of peace negotiations, or territorial cessions by the French government to Germany or Italy, or use of French strategical bases by those powers, or curtailment of French sovereignty in any point of France or her empire."]

Roosevelt Note Kept Secret

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Oct. 28.—Because it was addressed to him personally, Marshal Petain will not make public the letter President Roosevelt sent him October 24—the day he met Hitler—it was indicated here this evening by a qualified spokesman.

This was the first admission that such a message had been received, although radio listeners had been apprised of the fact by various foreign stations. Nevertheless, the news has not yet appeared in any paper in the unoccupied zone.

The same situation obtains regarding a personal letter sent to the French chief of state by King George VI of England. No indication is made as to whether Petain will reply. If he should do so the correspondence might be made public under the accepted rule that the disposal of any letter rests with the recipient.

It is no secret that the marshal has had relations with America in mind for some time and has been giving them much thought. Indeed, indications of the reaction of the United States to the principal current questions are much sought in many circles of Vichy, and there is considerable interest in the progress of the election campaign.

In some instances, there is possibly more interest than comprehension. It is well understood, nevertheless—and Secretary Hull's latest pronouncement on the subject has made the point quite clear—that one cause of American concern relates to French possessions in the Western Hemisphere. An authorized spokesman today indicated that France would do everything to preserve her colonies both in Asia and America, with special reference to Guadeloupe and Martinique. He seemed to consider it "impossible" that these island could ever be used by the Germans as bases of any kind.

destruction of crops by the Chinese—the "scorched earth" policy.

Chinese said that without Nanning the Japanese hold on China's south coast in the vicinity of Pakhoi might well be rendered untenable and Japanese control of South China might be limited to garrisoning of the Canton area, making the blockade difficult to enforce.

The Japanese said further occupation of the city was "meaningless" since their troops now occupy French Indo-China.

Chinese spokesmen asserted that the Japanese were quitting Nanning hastily to avoid complete encirclement by persistently attacking Chinese forces who have been closing in since October 24.

These sources said the Japanese had suffered heavy losses in severe fighting in the last few days.

The Japanese announcement, issued by Canton headquarters of the South China command, said:

"It goes without saying if Chinese forces attempt to hamper Japanese operations the Japanese won't hesitate to launch vigorous counter-attacks by land, air and deal out a relentless, smashing blow against Nanning."

Many Greeks Who Became Americans Serve With Greece

By Lloyd Lehrbas

Associated Press Staff Writer

Several thousand Americans are in the Greek army today—whether they like it or not.

In Athens I discovered that there is a legal conflict between American and Greek nationality regulations. Greece claims as subjects thousands whom the United States recognizes as American citizens. No American or Greek official could estimate the number.

Since Greece requires 18 months' service of all able-bodied males, many of these "Americans" were in uniform. Some were serving on the Albanian frontier which is now the first objective of the Fascist attack, and at Salonica, prezed by the Italians as a sea and naval base for extension of the war in the eastern Mediterranean and Near East.

In the American Legation in Athens a notice is posted which reports thereafare "numerous cases" in which American citizens of Greek race "have been compelled to serve in the Greek army" and detailing the procedure by which the legation attempts to protect their rights as Americans.

In many cases, they are Greeks who went to the United States, became American citizens, saved their money and returned to Greece to rear families. Others were born in the United States and taken to Greece as infants.

Many of those American "rookies" in King George's Grecian army have no recollection of the United States, and can't speak English.

Among them, however, I found a number of one-time residents of Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, Philadelphia, San Francisco, and a score of other large and small American cities, who were making every effort to avoid service with the Greek army.

Some simply didn't want to spend their time in drilling and training—or in fighting if Greece became embroiled in war.

Some were aware that if they were forced to serve and swore allegiance to King George, they might lose their American citizenship.

A few were Americans caught on visits to their families or relatives and inducted into service.

And now—professional men, shoeshiners, restaurant keepers, or whatever they may have been in the United States—they are in the Greek army.

How Balkans' Treaties Stand

London, Oct. 28 (AP).—How do the Balkans stand now that Italy has invaded Greece?

Here's a brief survey given here by diplomatic sources:

Turkey

With a direct interest in maintaining Greece's independence, Turkey has a nonaggression pact covering the Turkish-Greek border and has stood firm against Axis pressure. Turkey also has a mutual assistance pact with Britain.

Bulgaria

Definitely under German domination, Bulgaria, if she does anything, likely will go against Greece. She always had wanted an outlet through Greece to the Aegean Sea.

Yugoslavia

Occupying an unenviable geographical position, the Yugoslavs want to keep out of the war but their position has been summed up as follows: "If attacked by Germany they will fight with resignation. If attacked by Italy they will fight with gusto."

Rumania

Under German control, with German troops already established in her boundaries. Russia stands in the seized provinces of Bessarabia and northern Bucovina.

Nazis Give London 'Breathing Spell'

'Empress of Britain' Officially Admitted Sunk; 598 Saved

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 28.—Germany's air raiders gave London a comparative breathing spell today, but the British learned officially that Nazi sea raiders had sunk another great ship of their merchant fleet, the 42,348-ton Empress of Britain.

Forty-five persons who were aboard are missing and 598 others already have been brought ashore by British warships, an admiralty-war office communique said, paying tribute to the ship's "resolute and efficient" antiaircraft defense.

The Empress, flagship of Canada's merchant marine until she was impressed for war service as a transport, was the tenth largest passenger vessel afloat and the biggest merchantman lost in the war.

Finished by U-Boat

The British announcement merely listed the Empress of Britain as a victim of "enemy action" and said she foundered while in tow.

Survivors, however, described an air attack 150 miles west of Ireland last Saturday afternoon in which, they said, a Nazi plane raked her decks with machine-gun fire.

German reports said the ship was left a battered hulk after an air attack and was sent under early today with two finishing torpedoes from a submarine.

London's antiaircraft guns were silent for long periods during the night, indicating that British fighters were up to challenge the low-flying raiders coming over a few at a time.

Liverpool Attacked

Liverpool, another town in the northwest, and northeast Scotland reported night attacks by Germans flying in relays. Those over Scotland were chased back across the coast by British fighters.

Four times during the day air raid alarms shrilled in London and, almost as though on schedule, the sirens wailed a fifth alarm in the early evening for the fifty-second consecutive night.

All the daylight alarms in the capital were brief, however, and there were no reports of bombs falling in the London area.

The air ministry announced that "later reports show four enemy aircraft were shot down" Monday and "both of our fighter aircraft previously reported missing now are known to be safe."

Honors Paid Dead

Most of the 643 persons aboard the Empress of Britain, the communique said, were military families and a small number of military personnel.

It was the 10-year-old, $15,000,000 Empress of Britain, which was chosen to take King George VI and Queen Elizabeth home last year after their visit to America.

Most of the liner's gun crews were killed or wounded trying to drive off the raider and full honors have been accorded a number of dead brought to Britain aboard a warship.

Survivors said she was hit by high explosives as well as incendiary bombs which set fire to some lifeboats before they could be launched.

invasion of Albania by Italy.

Since then, Rumania has renounced the British pledge and permitted German troops to enter her territory, but Greece has stood with the British.

Forces Land

To what extent Britain has implemented the pledges with armed force had not been made known in London tonight.

IBut other capitals reported, without official confirmation, the British fleet has put ashore landing parties on Crete in the Aegean Sea, has taken over an island off Corfu, fairly near the Italian mainland, and has engaged an Italian p val force)

Authoritative military circles here said they regarded the Italian invasion of Greece as the opening episode in a new phase of the battle of Britain.

They said they have been watching for trouble in the Mediterranean since the stout resistance of the Royal Air Force has showed Adolf Hitler the battle of Britain "could not be won in Britain itself."

These authoritative sources said they believed the attack on Greece might result in the first great Mediterranean naval battle and the resumption of the Italian offensive against the British in Egypt.

Thus, they believe, a hard winter of fighting may decide the battle of Britain.

Greece's chief value was seen as a naval and air base against Italy.

Little was expected of Greece's 15 poorly equipped divisions, her insignificant air force and the Metaxas line, with its 3,000 "strong points" which Greece has been building since 1936.

Greece is extremely vulnerable to attack from the air. Athens is only 180 miles from the Italian island of Lero in the Dodecanese group off Turkey and 360 miles from Brindisi, on the heel of the Italian boot. Salonika, important Greek port, is only 270 miles from Brindisi.

At sea, however, it was a different story "unless the Italian fleet is joined by the French fleet."

Strategists recalled that the cooperation of the French fleet was said to have been one of the demands made by Adolf Hitler on the Vichy government.

Whether France's Chief of State Marshal Petain included the fleet in his decision to "collaborate" with Germany in the new European order was not known in London.

phonic communication between the United Press Bureau and Switzerland.)

An official communique said Hitler and Mussolini reached "complete understanding" on all problems discussed in their Florence conference. Hitler boarded his special train for Germany at 5:55 p. m. (10:55 a. m. E. S. T.) and Mussolini departed five minutes later, presumably for Rome.

The communique issued after their meeting said:

"Il Duce and the Fuehrer held a conversation lasting several hours which, in the spirit of the pact and the allegiance between the two nations, was held in the most cordial manner and demonstrated a complete identity of views on all present problems."

Talk of French Help

[Political circles, the Associated Press said, indicated a belief that the discussion included consideration of French Mediterranean collaboration in the Italo-Greek crisis and a possible plan to use the French fleet against the British.]

[These reports were described by an authorized German spokesman, however, as "absolutely untrue and bare of any foundation," a Berlin dispatch said.]

Informed quarters predicted a general speeding up of Axis offensives on all fronts, from the skies of London to Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's desert push toward the Suez Canal, particularly since British naval and air forces were reported being rushed from Egypt to aid Greece.

An official communique issued today stated that before invading Greece Italy had demanded the right to establish military bases in Greece for the duration of the war in order to "guarantee Greek neutrality." The demand was based on charges that Greece was permitting the British fleet, air force and secret service to operate from from Greece and thus establish a "military base working against Italy."

Ribbentrop on Hand

Italy called upon Greece to permit peaceful occupation of Greek territory and warned that resistance would mean war, the communique added.

Hitler, accompanied by Foreign Minister Ribbentrop, arrived on his special train outside the city early in the morning and waited until Mussolini and his foreign minister, Count Ciano, arrived from Rome at 10:40 a. m. (3:40 a. m. E. S. T.).

After Mussolini had received Hitler at the station, the two leaders proceeded in an open automobile to the conference at the Vecchio palace along streets lined with cheering crowds. Berlin reported that Field Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, chief of the supreme command of the German armed forces, went to Florence with Hitler.

Reports that British warships were rushing toward Greece from Egyptian bases were held to indicate that Italian operations in Egypt would be facilitated and her transport of troops and supplies to Libyan bases would be less hindered than heretofore.

With Graziani's forces already within 24 miles of Mersa Matruh, key position before Alexandria, the moment is believed most favorable for the Italian thrust. Although exact figures on Italian forces were not available, the press has constantly affirmed that they outnumber the British forces, put at 260,000 by Virginio Gayda and other commentators.

Hitler the Moderator

Rome, Oct. 28 (AP).—Some foreign observers believed it likely that Hitler came to Italy today primarily to induce Mussolini to scale down demands on France to the terms of the proposed German-French settlement.

Political sources referred to today's diplomatic agenda as a "link" in the Axis chain of events.

Of the three questions discussed—French collaboration with the Axis, the Italian-Greek crisis and Spain's role in the war—these informants said the first likely was uppermost.

The action against Greece, they said, probably already had been decided upon at the Brenner Pass meeting and the question placed before military technicians.

Little Asked by Reich

Some observers felt Germany might have more to gain than Italy from a moderate peace deal which would bring genuine French collaboration. Germany, they pointed out, asks comparatively little from France beyond what she already has taken.

Italy still has to get from the French virtually all the spoils demanded n the prewar Fascist press.

Foreign circles here heard that the Italian ultimatum had been held up until today—the eighteenth anniversary of the Fascist march on Rome which resulted in Mussolini's rise to power—because of heavy rains which hampered military action.

The Greek Minister, Jean Politis, was expected to receive instructions during the night to ask for his passport. He and his staff are expected to leave immediately.

Germans Eager For Some Word Of Florence

Silence Surrounds Hitler's Meeting With Mussolini

By Louis P. Lochner

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Oct. 28.—Political circles in Berlin, both domestic and foreign, waited anxiously tonight for some word from Florence to end a period of silence which has blanketed official Germany for a week of high-pressure Axis diplomacy.

That week has taken Adolf Hitler to the demarcation line between occupied and unoccupied France, to the French-Spanish border, back again to the demarcation line and finally to Florence. Successively he has seen Vice Premier Pierre Laval of France, Gen. Franco of Spain, Marshal Petain, France's chief of state, and now, Benito Mussolini.

Today, even the fact that Italy and Greece have come to grips had the status in Berlin of a report lacking official confirmation, along with rumors that the Reichstag will be convened soon.

Informed circles, asked about the warfare between Italy and Greece, said only that they presumed it was another step in the Axis program to "clear up Europe" and add that neither Greece nor Turkey had been very enthusiastic about the German-Italian scheme for a made-over continent.

Telephone communications with Athens was cut "temporarily."

Leading editorial writers, avoiding anything concrete, agreed that the aim of recent Axis activity is to exclude Britain permanently from exerting any influence on either the European continent or Africa.

The accent was on France and this seemed to indicate Hitler had something definite to report to Mussolini concerning his talks with Petain and Laval.

Kurt Megerle, of the Boersen Zeitung, who plays a role in Germany similar to that of Virginio Gayda in Italy, epitomized the general viewpoint by writing that France, having lost the war, must pay for it, but nevertheless has a big chance now to rehabilitate herself.

"If France . . . assumes the proper attitude," he wrote, "she has a chance of turning her fate for the better and connecting with the new European order in which she can earn the place she deserves," he said.

"If France wants to emerge from her difficult position she must not only change her attitude toward Germany but clarify her relationship to England, fundamentally. Much will depend upon the fundamental attitude assumed by France during the last phase of forcing England to the ground."

Ironical Touches Mark Conference Of Hitler, Duce

There were some ironical touches in yesterday's meeting of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini in Florence, Rome cables disclosed last night.

The two dictators met in the fourteenth century Palazzo Vecchia, in a hall decorated by a famous bust of Machiavelli, Italian Renaissance political writer whose name has become a synonym for cynical statesmanship.

After the luncheon which followed the conference, the Fuehrer and Duce attended a concert of chamber music—as Mussolini's troops smashed into Greece. On the program was a selection called "Lascia Mi Murer" (Let Me Die) by Monteverdi.

Actress 'Regrets,' But Plans Divorce

GAIL PATRICK, brunette movie actress, has separated from Robert H. Cobb, restaurateur, and will sue for divorce, she announced yesterday in Los Angeles. "We were so long extremely happy that it is with the greatest regret that I am filing complaint for divorce," she said. Cobb, saddened by the turn of events, said "there appears to be no other solution for our difficulties"

Pan-American Aviation Day Set for Dec. 17

Celebration of Pan-American Aviation Day, December 17, in connection with the opening of the Washington National Airport, was planned yesterday at a meeting of Government officials, aviation representatives and National Aviation Day Association officers.

John J. Crim, chairman of the board of directors of the association, was named chairman of a committee for the celebration and was authorized to appoint subcommittees. The meeting was held at the Pan American Union.

Arrangements probably will be made to invite officials of Central and South American countries to attend the ceremonies here, which will emphaize the solidarity of the Western Hemisphere and aviation's part in it, it was said.

been active in Bulgaria.

Greece has investments in the United States worth about $8,000,000, plus an undetermined amount of bank deposits and other short-term assets, the Commerce Department estimated yesterday. A "freeze" order, such as those issued to protect funds here of other countries invaded this year, would prevent transfer of funds abroad without United States permission. The purpose of the orders is to keep the "frozen" funds out of aggressor hands.

Americans have a stake of more than $23,000,000 in Greece, of which more than half is in bonds. The Greek war debt to the United States, also prejudiced by the hostilities, is $34,751,303, on which small "token" payments have been made in recent years.

Trade Had Increased

Trade between this country and Greece has been increasing in recent months.

During the first year of the present war the United States exported $9,038,582 worth of goods to Greece, taking goods valued at $21,701,609 in exchange.

Greece supplies the United States with chromites, figs, cheese and other products and is a sizable outlet for American exports of automotive products and machinery.

Extension of the Neutrality Act to Greece would impose "cash and carry" restrictions on all exports to that country and would forbid Americans to travel on Greek ships. The combat zone from which American vessels are barred already covers Greek waters.

88 Traffic Tickets Adjusted in Week, 5 for Diplomats

Five persons pleading diplomatic immunity were among 88 motorists whose traffic tickets were "fixed" last week, according to a list made public yesterday by police. Seventy were let off with warnings while 18 tickets were canceled outright.

Eight persons claimed their cars were either pushed or disabled; five claimed they were on official business and six explaining they were visitors and unfamiliar with District regulations.

Those escaping through doplimatic connections were: Juan B. Davila, Mexican Embassy; Dr Luigi Centra, Italian Embassy; Pedro Paul and Miss T. Remington, Netherlands Legation, and Rachel Schmuhl, 3141 Adams Mill Road.

Greek Ships in N. Y. Wait 'Developments'

At Least 3 Vessels Are on Atlantic En Route to America

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 28.—Greek shippers said today they would hold all ships in port "to await developments."

At least three freighters of the Hellenic Lines are on the Atlantic, bound for America. Numerous tramp steamers of the Greek mercantile marine, ninth largest in the world tonnage, are scattered throughout the Seven Seas.

Four freighters are in New York and two more in Philadelphia, and four have recently sailed from U. S. ports.

At the outbreak of the war in 1939, Greece had 607 merchant vessels of 1,780,666 tons. In the war at sea, she has lost at least 54, or 9 per cent, of these, a total of 221,390 tons.

[The British Broadcasting Corporation acting "on instructions of the Greek government" tonight advised all Greek ships at sea to put into United States, British or Dutch East Indies ports, and not to enter any port in France or French possessions.]

700 British Residents Interned in Italy

Rome, Oct. 28.—British subjects in concentration camps or internment towns were said today to number slightly more than 700 of some 1,800 British residents in Italy.

Malcolm Hooper, United States commercial attache, is directly in charge of British interests. The internees' average age is 55 years; there is one man aged 90 and a woman 83 years old.

Japanese Concerned On Greek Relations

Tokyo, Oct. 28 (AP).—Official Japanese circles were gravely concerned today over Japan's relations with Greece in as much as a literal interpretation of the three-power treaty would make the two countries enemies following hostilities between the Balkan country and Italy.

However, the authoritative news agency Domei said that "interpretation of the pact should be considered from a practical political standpoint, not in the strict literal sense."

Cause of Greece Linked To Canada's by Premier

Ottawa, Oct. 28 (AP).—Prime Minister Mackenzie King declared today that "the cause of Canada and her Allies is honored by the addition of the restoration of Greek freedom to the objects for which we shall fight until victory is achieved.

"The cause of Greek freedom has, for over 100 years, attracted the chivalrous interest of the English-speaking world," said his statement.

Kaiser Called Metaxas 'A Little Moltke'

London, Oct. 28 (AP).—Sixty-nine-year-old Premier John Metaxas of Greece, once rejected an invitation to enroll in the German army.

While a student in a Berlin military academy he wrote some papers on strategy which won him the army bid.

"No, thank you," Metaxas was reported to have replied. "In Germany there are many Metaxas—in Greece only one."

Kaiser Wilhelm II once referred to him as "a little Moltke," a reference to a noted German field marshal of the nineteenth century.

De Gaulle Names Empire Defense Aides

London, Oct. 28 (AP).—Gen Charles De Gaulle, leader of Frenchmen fighting for Britain, today named the following members of a council of defense of the French empire: Gen. Georges Catroux, former Governor of French Indo-China; Vice Admiral Emile Muselier, commander in chief of the Free French navy and air force; Gen. Edgard Rene Marie de Larminat, Governor of French Equatorial Africa; Gov. Eboue of the Chad territory; Gov. Sautort of the French establishment in the Pacific (Oceania), Gen. Sice, of the Army Medical Corps in Africa; Prof. Rene Cassin, former president of the Ex-Service Men's Association; the Rev. Thierry D'Argenlieu and Col. Leclare, commissioner of the French Cameroons.

R.A.F. Raiders Leave Skoda Plant Aflame

GERMAN RAIDS on London ease up as Nazi bombers continue concentration on West Coast ports and Midland industries.

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 28.—British bombers, ranging farther from home than ever before in their systematic assault on Germany, were reported tonight to have bombed successfully and left in flames the huge Skoda armament works in what once was Czecho-Slovakia.

The air ministry tersely declared a "strong force of Royal Air Force bombers" attacked the works at Pilsen, Bohemia, last night.

But the ministry's news service, in an amplification of the formal communique, said the British bombers set the plant on fire after a 750-mile flight from the English coast through dirty weather.

Never relaxing their attacks on the "invasion cost" opposite England, Blenheim bombers of the coastal command were reported by the ministry news service to have hit a power station at the Nazi-held French naval base of Loriet. A big blue flash spurted out of the station when the bomb hit, it was said.

Plane Hangar Hit

The Querqueville airdrome, near Cherbourg, also was bombed, the news service said, with direct hits on a hangar.

The British concentrated on oil refineries in other night bombing forays. The air ministry said six were attacked; two at Hamburg and others at Hanover, Ostermoor, Gelsenkirchen and Magdeburg.

Other targets reported raided were 14 German air bases and the rail and water hubs of Germany's communications system.

The pilots on the Skoda raid reported they spent an hour searching for the great armaments factory before finding its silhouette against the snow-covered ground.

"Fierce fires and explosions followed the attack and a pilot who made three separate runs over the target, bombing by the light of flares dropped by other aircraft, reported that all his heavy bombs found their mark," the news service said.

Fires were "seen to be increasing in size and new outbreaks were gaining ground" as the British flew away from the city," the pilots said.

Italian Bases Bombed

Cairo, Egypt, Oct. 28 (AP).—British air attacks on the Italian bases at Bengasi and Derna, on the Libyan coast, and the port of Assab, in Eritrea, were reported today in an R. A. F. communique.

At Assab, near the southern end of the Red Sea, considerable damage to naval headquarters and barracks and to a ship in the harbor was reported. That attack was made Saturday. The Libyan bases were bombed yesterday but ground haze prevented pilots from seeing what damage they had done.

Rome, Oct. 28 (AP).—The Italian high command reported today that British planes had "wildly" bombed Maltezza, on the Italian island of Stampalia, but failed to cause any damage.

It is said the British killed five persons and wounded some in an air raid east of Bengasi and killed two persons in another foray in East Africa.

Italian airmen shot down two British planes certainly and perhaps a third, in a fight over Malta, it said.

Nine Italian pursuit planes engaged a similar number of British, the daily communique said. All the Italian ships were reported to have returned safely.

Further air bombardments in Egypt and Malta also were reported.

Fascist Encampment Attacked

Nairobi, Kenya, Oct. 28 (AP).—A successful attack by a British air unit on an Italian encampment in Ethiopia was reported in a British communique issued here today.

Pope Names Nov. 24 As Day of Prayer

Vatican City, Oct. 28 (AP).—Pope Pius XII today proclaimed November 24 a day of "holy masses and public prayer to be offered throughout the world for the present needs of human society."

The Pope asked that the prayers be accompanied by "acts of penance and by spiritual improvement in each one's life."

He expressed hope that, as a result, "all those who die as the result of the war may obtain eternal rest; that exiles, refugees, prisoners and all who suffer or mourn through the calamity of the present conflict may have heaven-sent comforts of grace; that finally, order being restored in justice and minds being appeased through Christian charity, true peace may unite as brothers all the peoples of the human family, giving them back tranquillity and prosperity."

Nazis Reported Building Big Sub Fleet

of the fall of Paris last spring.

Then France was credited with six more battleships, four more cruisers, 23 more destroyers and 15 additional submarines. These are the first authoritative estimates of the size of the French navy since the Petain government's surrender and Great Britain seized and sunk part of its former ally's fleet.

For the first time in many years some data is available as to the Soviet navy. These figures estimate the Russian fleet as consisting of three battleships, one aircraft carrier, nine cruisers, 67 destroyers and a submarine force which may even exceed the German U-boat total. An estimated 171 submarines are said to be in operation by the Soviets, but these sources make no conjecture as to the number of such craft Stalin may be building.

While no detailed information is available as to the size of the U-boats in the mighty submarine fleet projected by Germany, many are believed to be small craft designed to operate close to their bases. There have been reports that some of these have been transported on freight cars to the new German submarine base on the Black Sea, and it is considered that operating from there or Italian bases, they might play an important factor in any forthcoming Axis campaign against Turkey or Egypt.

Britain Still Strongest

Great Britain's fleet is pictured slightly weaker in most categories than at the start of the war, but still substantially larger than the combined forces of its adversaries. Not counting the 50 destroyers traded to Britain for bases by the United States, the United Kingdom is shown as possessing 14 battleships, one less than a year ago; six carriers, the same as then; 61 cruisers as against 64; 172 destroyers or 12 less, and 52 submarines, seven less than then.

England's building program is also smaller than at the start of the war, according to the figures. None of the nine battleships then shown as under construction has been completed (although other data indicates several have been launched) and six carriers are listed as building, the same number as a year ago.

Only 18 cruisers, a like number of destroyers and four submarines are listed as under construction, 30 less in all than in September, 1939. British shipyards are believed to have been filled with merchant ships being converted to military use and have had to be used for repairing damaged warships during this period.

Japan Adds 28 Ships

Japan is revealed to have added some 28 combatant ships to its fleet and to have laid down about 27 more during the past year. It has completed one aircraft carrier, four cruisers, about 12 destroyers and 10 submarines, according to the data, while laying down an estimated five battleships, two carriers, four cruisers and perhaps 14 destroyers.

The figures as to the United States show that one carrier, two cruisers, and eight submarines have been added to the fleet, while the number of destroyers was reduced from 222 to 155 by the transfer of 50 ships to Great Britain and the conversion of others to special types.

The huge building program authorized by Congress last summer dwarfs those of the other world powers. Of the 329 warships shown as "building," however, contracts have just been let for 201, and the keels of some of these will not be laid for two or three years.

When these ships are completed—in 1948, according to best estimates—the tables make plain that the United States fleet will exceed those of the Axis powers, including their ships in service or now building, and will give this Nation the greatest armada the world has ever seen.

Russia Watches Invasion Silently

Japanese-Soviet nonaggression pact as some diplomatic quarters had expected.

There was a noticeable turn for the better, meanwhile, in Moscow's relations with Turkey, especially since the Turkish Ambassador returned to Moscow recently and conferred with Premier Molotoff. Russia likewise has sent a new envoy to Ankara.

"Protection" for Dardanelles

Budapest, Oct. 28 (AP).—Rumors were current in the Balkans today that Russia was preparing to take over the Dardanelles "protectively" as southeastern Europe nervously awaited some indication of Moscow's attitude over Italy's invasion of Greece.

Diplomatic observers expressed belief that the entire question of German-Russian relations was approaching a showdown.

Many said they believed Moscow was informed in advance of the Italian action and that no Soviet interventoin could be expected.

[Fascist sources in Rome told the United Press they were "sure" Russia's "full agreement" to the move against Greece had been obtained by the Axis partners.]

But it was widely felt that Russian reaction ultimately will depend on the extent to which Moscow believes the Soviet's Black Sea interests are threatened by this latest Axis move.

'Outside-Heart' Baby Dies After 23 Days of Life

The baby girl with the "outside heart" who amazed doctors with her fight for life, died early yesterday, 23 days after birth—breaking by two days the longest record in medical annals for infants born with the same affliction.

Born prematurely in Gallinger Hospital on October 5, the 5-pound girl was given slight chance to live more than a few hours. The child was born to Mrs. Whitfield Neville, 26, colored, of the 1300 block of Neale Street Northeast.

Placed in a special incabator, the infant clung to life despite the fact that she also suffered from a head growth which endangered the brain. Physicians believed this ailment alone would bring death soon.

However, death was attributed to a weakened condition due to the position of the heart outside the body.

Turks Say They 'Prefer the Hell of War to Dishonor'

to a United Press report that neutral diplomats in Yugoslavia expect a German attack on Turkey through Bulgaria.]

However, Turkey kept her vaunted "2,000,000 bayonets" poised as capital sources pointed to a recent government statement that Turkey would aid Greece in the event of an Italian attack—if Britain made good her promise to aid the Greeks.

(The British assured Greece they would send all help possible and British landing parties already were reported on Greek soil. Thus it appeared that Turkey might be called upon to observe her alliance in the near future.)

Foreign Minister Saracoglu was understood to have reported on the Greek developments at a two and one-half hour meeting of the Turkish inner cabinet.

President Gen. Ismet Inonu received the Greek ambassador early yesterday morning and talked by telephone with Greece's Premier Metaxas, it was reported, but there was no official indication that Turkey intended to go immediately to Greece's aid.

The Turkish attitude, foreign observers said, was believed to depend somewhat on Russia, which is known to have ambitions on the Dardanelles Straits that control entry into the Black Sea.

(In Budapest, rumors were current that Russia is preparing to take over the Dardanelles "protectively." It was widely felt there that Russian reaction will depend on the extent to which Moscow believes its Black Sea interests are menaced.)

Observers expressed doubt that Turkey could obtain Russian help if Turkey went to war, and some speculated on whether a German-Russian secret agreement covered Axis moves in the Balkans and Near East.

It was reported that Greece had asked Turkey to detain all Greek ships in Turkish waters but the reply is not yet known.

It was said that a government spokesman recently declared that Turkey was not bound to assist Greece if the latter was attacked directly by Italy "but if the British guaranty was implemented Turkey would aid Greece as an ally of Britain."

[A British broadcasting corporation report heard by N. B. C. said Maj. Gen. Arthur Smith, chief of staff of British forces in the Near East, was arriving by air in Ankara yesterday to see the deputy chief of the Turkish general staff.]

Semiofficial Turkish quarters received news of Greece's resistance to the Italians with great admiration and sympathy.

"We are convinced the Italian pressure on Greece will not give positive results," these quarters said.

Turkey and Greece in recent years have become friends and allies after a bitter enmity immediately after the World War.

Text of Italy's Ultimatum To the Greeks

Fascists Charge Athens Offered Help To Great Britain

Rome, Oct. 28.—The text of the Italian note presented to the Greek government at 3 a. m. (8 p. m., E. S. T., Sunday) by Emanuele Grazzi, Italian minister in Athens, follows:

The Italian government has repeatedly noted how, in the course of the present conflict, the Greek government assumed and maintained an attitude which was contrary not only with that of formal, peaceful, good neighborly relations between two nations but also with the precise duties which were incumbent on the Greek government in view of its status as a neutral country.

On various occasions the Italian government has found it necessary to urge the Greek government to observe these duties and to protest against their systematic violation, particularly serious since the Greek government permitted its territorial water, its coasts and its ports to be used by the British fleet in the course of its war operations, aided in supplying the British air forces and permitted organization of a military information service in the Greek archipelago to Italy's damage.

Proof of Cooperation

The Greek government was perfectly aware of these facts, which several times formed the basis of diplomatic representations on the part of Italy to which the Greek government, which should have taken consideration of the grave consequences of its attitude, failed to respond with any measure for the protection of its own neutrality but, instead, intensified its activities favoring the British armed forces and its cooperation with Italy's enemies.

The Italian government has proof that this cooperation was foreseen by the Greek government and was regulated by understandings of a military, naval and aeronautical character. The Italian government does not refer only to the British guarantee accepted by Greece as a part of the program of action against Italy's security but also to explicit, precise engagements undertaken by the Greek government to put at the disposal of powers at war with Italy important strategic positions on Greek territory, including air bases in Tessaglia and Macedonia designed for attack on Albanian territory.

In this connection, the Italian government must remind the Greek government of the provocative activities carried out against the Albanian nation, together with the terroristic policy it has adopted toward the people of Ciamuria and the persistent efforts to create disorders beyond its frontiers.

Ease of Operations

For these reasons, also, the Italian government has accepted the necessity, even though futilely, of calling the attention of the Greek government to the inevitable consequences of its policy toward Italy. This no longer can be tolerated by Italy.

Greek neutrality has been tending continuously toward a mere shadow. Responsibility for this situation lies primarily on the shoulders of Great Britain and its aim to involve ever more countries in war.

But now it is obvious that the policy of the Greek government has been and is directed toward transforming Greek territory, or at least permitting Greek territory to be transformed, into a base for war operations against Italy.

This could only lead to armed conflict between Italy and Greece, which the Italian government has every intention of avoiding.

The Italian government therefore has reached the decision to ask the Greek government, as a guaranty of Italian security, for permission to occupy with its own armed forces several strategic points in Greek territory for the duration of the present conflict with Great Britain.

Do Not Come as Enemies

The Italian government asks the Greek government not to oppose this occupation and not to obstruct the free passage of the troops carrying it out.

These troops do not come as enemies of the Greek people and the Italian government does not in any way intend that the temporary occupation of several strategic points, dictated by special necessities of a purely defensive character, should compromise Greek sovereignty and independence.

The Italian government asks that the Greek government give immediate orders to military authorities that this occupation may take place in a peaceful manner. Wherever the Italian troops may meet resistance this resistance will be broken by armed force and the Greek government will have the responsibility for the resulting consequences."

Roosevelt's Speech 'Indicting Republican Leaders Out of Their Own Mouths'

Politics Played With Defense, He Charges

Madison Square Garden Address Cites Record Of Votes in Congress

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 28.—Following is the prepared text of President Roosevelt's political address tonight in Madison Square Garden:

Tonight I take up again the public duty—the far from disagreeable duty — of answering major campaign falsifications with facts.

Last week in Philadelphia, I nailed the falsehood about some fanciful secret treaties, to dry on the barn door. I nailed that falsehood and other falsehoods the way, when I was a boy up in Dutchess County, we used to nail up the skins of foxes and weasels.

Tonight I am going to nail up the falsifications that have to do with our relations with the rest of the world, and with the building up of our Army, Navy and air defense. It is a very dangerous thing to distort facts about such things. If repeated over and over again, it is also apt to create a sense of fear and doubt in the minds of some of the American people.

I now brand as false the statement being made by Republican campaign orators, day after day and night after night, that the rearming of America was slow, that it is hamstrung and impeded, that it will never be able to meet the threats from abroad. Those are the whisperings of appeasers.

Entirely Different Song

That particular misstatement was invented about the time of the Republican National Convention. Before that, the responsible Republican leaders had been singing an entirely different song. For almost seven years the Republican leaders in the Congress kept on saying that I was placing too much emphasis on national defense.

And now today these men of great vision have suddenly discovered that there is a war on in Europe and another one in Asia. And so, now, always with their eyes in the good old ballot box, they are charging that we have placed too little emphasis on national defense.

But, unlike them, the printed pages of the Congressional Record cannot be changed or suppressed at election time. And based on that permanent record of their speeches and their votes, I make this assertion—that if the Republican leaders had been in control of the Congress of the United States during the past seven years, the important measures for our defense would not now be law, and that the Army and Navy of the United States would still be in almost the same condition in which I found them in 1933.

I make these charges against the responsible political leadership of the Republican Party. There are millions of patriotic Republicans who have at all times been in smypathy with the efforts of this Administration to arm itself adequately for defense.

To Washington in the past few months have come, not two or three or a dozen, but several hundred of the best business executives in the United States—Republicans and Democrats alike. Not holding company lawyers or executives, but men experienced in actual production—production of all the types of machines and tools and steel that have made this Nation the industrial leader of the world.

Progress Is Proof

I asked Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius and Mr. Harriman and Mr. Budd and the many others to serve because I believe they are certainly among the ablest men in the country in their own fields. I do not know their politics. I do not care about their politics. All I know is that their are cooperating 100 per cent with this Administration in our efforts for national defense. And this Government is cooperating with them—100 per cent.

All of these men—all of American industry and American labor—are doing magnificent and unselfish work. The progress today proves it.

I shall have occasion in a later speech to tell more about the work they are doing, and about the progress which has been made in our defense.

When the first World War broke out, we were pretty weak, but by the end of it, we were one of the strongest naval and military powers in the world. When this Administration first came into office 15 years later, we were one of the weakest.

As early as 1933 the storm was gathering in Europe and in Asia. Year by year I reported the warnings of danger from our listening posts in foreign lands. But I was only called "an alarmist" by the Republican leadership, and by the great majority of the Republican papers.

Peak of Efficiency

Year by year I asked for more and more defense appropriations. In addition, I allocated hundreds of millions of dollars for defense work from relief funds, from Civilian Conservation Corps funds and from Public Works funds—as was understood by the Congress when the funds were voted.

Today our Navy is at a peak of efficiency and fighting strength. Ship for ship, and man for man, it is as powerful and efficient as any that ever sailed the seas in the history of the world. Our Army and our air forces are now at the highest level they have ever been in peace time. But in the light of existing dangers they are not great enough for the absolute safety of America.

While this great, constructive work was going forward, the Republican leaders were trying to block our efforts toward national defense. They not only voted against these efforts; but they stated time and again through the years that they were unnecessary and extravagant, that our armed strength was sufficient for any emergency.

I propose now to indict these Republican leaders out of their own mouths—these leaders who now disparage our defenses—indict them with what they themselves said in the days before this election year, about how adequate our defenses already were.

Listen to this statement for instance. I quote:

"The facts are that we have the largest and the greatest air forces we ever had and a match for any nation."

Now who do you think made this statement in June, 1938? It was not I. It was not even a member of this Administration. It was the ranking Republican member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Republican leader Hamilton Fish.

And now listen to ex-President Hoover speaking in that same year of 1938. I quote:

"We shall be expending $900,000,000 more than any nation on earth," he complained. "We are leading in the arms race."

And now listen to Republican leader Senator Vandenberg, also speaking in 1938. He said that our defense expenditures had already brought us (and I quote) "an incomparably efficient navy;" and he said further "I rise in opposition to this super-super navy bill. I do not believe it is justified by any conclusive demonstration of national necessity."

And now listen to Republican leader Senator Taft—the runner-up this year for the Republican Presidential nomination—speaking in February, 1940. I quote:

"The increase of the Army and Navy over the tremendous appropriations of the current year seems to be unnecessary if we are concerned solely with defense."

There is the record: There is the permanent crystal clear record. Until the present political campaign opened, Republican leaders, in Congress and out, shouted from the housetops that our defenses were fully adequate.

Remarkable Somersault

Today they complain that this Administration has starved our armed forces, that our Navy is anemic, our Army puny, our air forces piteously weak.

This is a remarkable somersault.

I wonder if the election could have something to do with it. And this seems what they would have called logic when I was a kid. If the Republican leaders were telling the truth in 1938, then—out of their own mouths—they stand convicted of inconsistency today. If they are telling the truth today, then they stand convicted of inconsistency in 1938.

The simple truth is that the Republican Party played politics with defense in 1938 and 1939. They are playing politics with national security today.

The same group will still control their party policy in the Congress. It is the Congress which passes the laws of the United States. The record of these Republican leaders shows what a slim chance the cause of strong defense would have, if they were in control.

Not only in their statements but in their votes is written their record of sabotage of this Administration's continual efforts to increase our defenses to meet the dangers that loomed ever larger upon the horizon.

For example, deeply concerned over what was happening in Europe, I asked the Congress in January, 1938, for a naval expansion of 20 per cent—46 additional ships and 950 new planes.

What did the Republican leaders do when they had this chance to increase our national defense almost three years ago? You would think from their present barrage of verbal pyrotechnics that they rushed in to pass that bill, or that they even demanded a larger expansion of the Navy.

But, ah! My friends, they were not in a national campaign for votes then.

In those days they were trying to build up a different kind of political fence.

All Is Changed

In those days they thought that the way to win votes was by representing this Administration as extravagant in national defense; indeed, as hysterical and as manufacturing panics and inventing foreign dangers.

But now, in the serious days of 1940, all is changed! Not only because they are serious days, but because they are election days as well.

On the radio these Republican orators swing through the air with the greatest of ease; but the American people are not voting this year for the best trapeze performer.

The plain fact is that when the naval expansion bill was submitted to the Congress the Republican leaders jumped in to fight it.

Who were they? There was the present Republican candidate for Vice President, Senator McNary. There were Senator Vandenberg and Senator Nye. There was the man who would be the chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Congressman Fish.

The first thing they did was to try to eliminate the battleships from the bill. The Republicans in the House voted 67 to 20 against building them; and in the Senate the Republicans voted 7 to 4 against building them.

Record Is Clear

The record is certainly clear that back in 1938 the Republican leaders were positive that we needed no more battleships. The Naval Expansion Bill was passed; but it was passed by Democratic votes in the Congress—in spite of Republican opposition.

Again, in March, 1939, the Republican Senators voted 12 to 4 against the bill for $102,000,000 to buy certain stretegic defense materials which we did not have in the United States.

In March, 1939, the Republicans in the Senate voted 11 to 8 against increasing the authorized number of planes in the Navy.

In June, 1939, Republicans in the House voted 144 to 8 in favor of reducing appropriations for the Army Air Corps.

Now that proves this one simple fact. It proves that if the Republican leaders had been in control in 1938 and 1939, these measures to increase our Navy and our air forces would have been defeated overwhelmingly.

I say that the Republican leaders played politics with defense in 1938 and 1939. I say that they are playing politics with our national security today.

Now Yelling "Me, Too"

One more example:

The Republican campaign orators and leaders are all now yelling "me, too," on help to Britain. But last fall they had their chance to vote to give aid to Britain and other democracies—and they turned it down.

This chance came when I recommended that the Congress repeal the embargo on the shipment of armaments and munitions to nations at war, and permit such shipments on a "cash-and-carry basis." It is only because of the repeal of the embargo law that we have been able to sell planes and ships and guns and munitions to victims of aggression.

How did the Republicans vote on the repeal of this embargo?

In the Senate the Republicans voted 14 to 6 against it. In the House the Republicans voted 140 to 19 against it.

The act was passed by Democratic votes, but it was over the opposition of the Republican leaders. And just to name a few, the following Republican leaders voted against the act—Senators McNary, Vandenberg, Nye and Johnson; Congressman Martin, Barton and Fish.

Now, at the eleventh hour, they have discovered what we knew all along—that overseas success in warding off invasion by dictatorship forces means safety to the United States as well as to those smaller nations which still retain their independence and the restoration of sovereignty to those smaller nations which have temporarily lost it. One of the keystones of American policy is the recognition of the right of small nations to survive and prosper.

One More Example

Great Britain would never have received an ounce of help from us—if the decision had been left to Martin, Barton and Fish.

Let us come down to one more example—which took place just two months ago.

In the Senate there was an amendment to permit the United States Government to prevent profiteering or unpatriotic obstruction by any corporation in defense work. It permitted the Government to take over, with reasonable compensation, any manufacturing plant which refused to cooperate in national defense. The Republican Senators voted against this Russell-Overton amendment on August 28, 1940, eight to six.

The bill was adopted all right—by Democratic votes. But the apposing vote of those eight Republican leaders showed what would happen if the National Government were turned over to their control. Their vote said, in effect, that they put money rights ahead of human lives—to say nothing of national security.

You and I, and the overwhelming majority of Americans, will never stand for that.

Outside the halls of Congress eminent Republican candidates began to turn new somersaults. At first they denounced the bill, then when public opinion rose up to demand it, they seized their trapeze with the greatest of ease, and reversed themselves in midair.

This record of Republican leadership—a record of timidity, weakness and shortsightedness—is as bad in international as in military affairs.

Memories Seem Short

It is the same record of timidity, weakness and shortsightedness which they showed in domestic affairs when they were in control before 1933.

But the Republican leaders' memories seem to have been short, in this, as in other matters. And by the way—who was it said that an elephant never forgets?

It is the same record of timidity, weakness and shortsightedness which governed the policy of the confused, reactionary governments in France and England before the war.

That fact was discovered too late in France.

It was discovered just in time in Great Britain.

Pray God, that having discovered it over here we won't forget it either.

For eight years our main concern has been to look for peace and the preservation of peace.

In 1935, in the face of growing dangers throughout the world, your Government undertook to eliminate the hazards which in the past had led to war.

By the Neutrality Act of 1935, and by other steps:

We made it possible to prohibit American citizens from traveling on vessels belonging to countries at war. Was that right?

We made it clear that American investors, who put their money into enterprises in foreign nations, could not call on American warships or soldiers to bail out their investments. Was that right?

We made it clear that we would not use American armed forces to intervene in affairs of the sovereign republics to the south of us. Was that right?

We made it clear that ships flying the American flag could not carry munitions to a belligerent; and that they must stay out of war zones. Was that right?

In all these ways, we made it clear to every American, and to every foreign nation, that we would avoid becoming entangled through some episode beyond our borders.

Measures for Peace

These were measures to keep us at peace. And through all the years of war since 1935, there has been no entanglement, and there will be no entanglement.

In July, 1937, Japan invaded China.

On January 3, 1938, I called the attention of the Nation to the danger of the whole world situation.

It was clear that rearmament was now a necessary implement of peace. I asked for large additions to American defenses. I was called an alarmist—and worse names than that.

In March, 1938, German troops marched into Vienna.

In September, 1938, came the Munich crisis. German, French and Czech armies were mobilized. The result was only an abortive armistice.

I said then: "It is becoming increasingly clear that peace by fear has no higher nor more enduring quality than peace by the sword."

Three months later, at Lima, the 21 American republics solemnly agreed to stand together to defend the independence of each one of us.

The declaration at Lima was a great step toward peace. For unless the Hemisphere is safe, we are not safe.

Matters grew steadily worse in Europe. Czecho-Slovakia was overrun by the Nazis. General war seemed inevitable.

Yet even then the Republican leaders kept chanting, "There will be no war."

Realistic Fight for Peace

A few months later—on the first of September, 1939—war came.

The steps which we had carefully planned were put into effect.

American ships were kept from danger zones.

American citizens were helped to come home.

Unlike 1914, there was no financial upheaval.

The American republics set up at Panama a system of patrolling the waters of the whole Western Hemisphere.

I ask you to support a continuance of this type of affirmative, realistic fight for peace. The alternative is to risk the future of the country in the hands of those with this record of timidity, weakness and shortsightedness or in the inexperienced hands of those who in these perilous days are willing recklessly to imply that our boys are already on their way to the transports.

This affirmative search for peace calls for clear vision. It is necessary to mobilize resources, minds and skills, and every active force for peace in the world.

We have steadily sought to keep mobilized the greatest force of all—religious faith, devotion to God.

Tragedies Enacted

Your Government is working at all times with representatives of the Catholic, Protestant and Jewish faiths. Without these spiritual forces we cannot make or maintain peace, and all three of them work with us toward that great end.

Shadows, however, are still heavy over the faith and hope of humankind.

We—who walk in the ways of peace and freedom and light—have seen the tragedies enacted in one free land after another.

We have not been blind to the causes, or to the consequences, of these tragedies.

We guard ourselves against all evils—spiritual as well as material—which may beset us. We guard against the forces of anti-Christian aggression, which may attack us from without, and the forces of ignorance and fear which may corrupt us from within.

We shall continue to go forward in firm faith. We shall continue to go forward in peace.

The Justice Department said yesterday that election fraud investigations would be started this week in Philadelphia, Buffalo, N. Y., and Dilmington, Del., and various communities in New Jersey.

Federal grand juries are being convened, Maurice M. Milligan, special assistant to the Attorney General in charge of election frauds investigations said. He ordered an immediate inquiry into complaints that staffs of the United States Attorney, marshal, internal revenue collector and other Government agencies at Buffalo had been solicited for funds in Federal buildings by the national committee to uphold constitutional government.

G. O. P. 'Playing Politics' With Defense, Roosevelt Says

created an ear-splitting din that lasted four minutes.

At the very outset of his speech, the President took cognizance of the news of the day in an interpolation in his prepared address. In a reference interpreted as a dig at the leader rather than the people of Italy, he said, "I am sure that al lof us feel sorrow in our hearts for the Italian and the Grecian people that they should be involved in conflict."

G. O. P. Leaders Attacked

Former Postmaster General Farley accompanied the President from his special train to Madison Square Garden. There he took his place on the platform with other Democratic notables, including Gov. and Mrs. Lehman, Secretary Morgenthau, Senators Mead and Wagner, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce Patterson, and several Democratic Representatives.

The President charged that until the present campaign opened, "Republican leaders, in Congress and out, shouted from the house tops that our defenses were fully adequate."

And on this point he quoted—amidst laughter from the audience—speeches of Representative Fish, of New York, ranking Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee; Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and Senator Taft, of Ohio, "runner-up this year for the Republican Presidential nomination," and former President Hoover.

He frequently chided Republican Representatives Martin, Barton and Fish.

Departed from Text

He digressed from his prepared text while listing steps that he said were taken by the Administration to keep out of war.

"These were measures to keep us at peace, and through all the years of war since 1935, there has been no entanglement" his prepared speech said. But to that he added: "And there will be no entanglement."

Other speakers at the rally included Lehman, Mead and Wagner.

Immediately after his address, the President left the Garden to board his special train for Washington, where he will confer at 9:30 tomorrow morning with Secretary of State Hull and Undersecretary Sumner Welles on the hostilities between Italy and Greece.

Earlier today in Manhattan's clothing center—along Seventh Avenue from Thirty-fourth to Fortieth Streets—the resident received a record ovation, marked by a throng of screaming women and a blizzard of paper floating down from the gigantic loft biuldings that line the avenue.

Some observers said they had never seen a more enthusiastic reception in a city noted for its enthusiasm. Police lines were broken; the crowds swarmed into the street. And it was a crowd containing many members of David Dubinsky's International Ladies Garment Workers Union (A. F. of L.), that seemed 100 per cent for Roosevelt.

In the Bronx, too, along the Grand Concourse and down Washington Avenue, the cheers and screams of hundreds of thousands of onlookers must have equaled if not surpassed any ovation in the city's history.

The reception ranged from near-hysteria in the garment center and the Bronx to compartive coolnees—and even some boos—in one or two Italian sections of this sprawling city.

For more than eight hours, the President waved and smiled at the millions who lined the streets of Newark, of Mayor Hague's province of Jersey City, of the industrial community of Bayone, Staten Island, poverty-stricken reaches of Brooklyn, the garment district of Manhattan, factory-studded Queens and, finally, Democratic National Chairman Edward J. Flynn's bailiwick of The Bronx.

As the sun disappeared behind the city's buildings, the President was received at Fordham University, Catholic institution that is celebrating its centenary this fall.

With New York's Archbishop Francis J. Spellman sitting beside him, the Chief Executive was welcomed by Father Robert Gannon, president of Fordham, as "a symbol of our generation."

Before reviewing the university's R. O. T. C. unit, President Roosevelt told the boys they were being trained to save, "against possible attack, the lives of all other men, women and children in America."

The visit to Fordham was considered significant in view of the intense opposition to the President's reelection expressed by some Catholic journals.

Earlier in the kaleidoscopic day, President Roosevelt lashed out at his Republican opponent in all but name, as he told a New York slum-area crowd:

"I do not go so far as to promise every man, woman and child that in the next four years they will have private employment. I could not do it honestly and could not say it honorably."

Cheered by 3,000 Girls

Through the garment district, Mr. Roosevelt drove to lunch at Hunter College with the faculty and then tell some 3,000 wildly cheering girls that "I still don't believe that this Nation or this State or this city want to go back to the horse and buggy days."

The President proceeded through fairly thin crowds along Park Avenue to the new Queens-Midtown Tunnel, which will open to the public November 15. Through the tunnel he proceeded to the WPA-built LaGuardia Airport, and then across the Tri-Borough Bridge to the Bronx, to Fordham and to dinner.

At Hunter College, the President conferred briefly with R. J. Thomas, vice president of the C. I. O. and international president of the Auto Workers Union.

Text of Willkie's Address Charging New Deal 'Suffocated' Democratic Party

3d-Term Drive Jeopardizes U. S., He Says

Candidate Invades Kentucky in Urging Tradition Be Upheld

Louisville, Oct. 28.—The following is the prepared text of Wendell L. Willkie's speech here tonight:

The two-party system has been a great source of strength to us in America. Both parties have always believed in the same Constitution. They have both believed in the same way of life—the American one. They have differed only in their ideas of the means, under that Constitution, by which that life could be made ample and secure.

In these days of turmoil, when democracy is under attack in all quarters of the world, every American must cherish every significant attribute of democracy. We must not become divided into many small and ineffective parties, each one at odds with all the others.

Nor may we tolerate, as have many countries in Europe, a single party—a party of American dictatorship.

For these reasons American citizens, whether Republicans or Democrats, have been distressed by the degenerative process in Washington during the last seven and a half years. During those years the Democratic Party has been in power nominally. But what has really been in power? Has it been the Democratic Party?

What has been the influence of men like John Garner of Texas, of men like Senator Tydings of Maryland or Senator Byrd, or Senator Carter Glass. These men, stanch Democrats, and a host of their like, have had to fight against a new party, a rash and overbearing party—the party of the New Deal.

Democratic Party Suffocated

This New Deal party consists of a candidate, and a little group of men in large part unknown to our people. The candidate is vested with the enormous powers of the Presidency. The little group of unbelieving and ambitious men are the beneficiaries of those powers. This party grew up in Washington out of the Democratic Party, and, fungus-like, has suffocated it. It is unlike the Democratic Party. Its principles are as hostile to those of the Democratic Party, and they are as fatal to it, as the fungus is to the oak.

It is this New Deal party that now makes its ultimate grasp for power—the repeal of the rule against the third term—that its reign may continue in perpetuity.

We are not governed by written laws alone. No men are. The greater part of our daily life is governed by our unwritten common law, developed from the usage and the custom of generations of men. It is that unwritten common law which gives effect to the promises of merchants and to the ties of family affection. It defines most of our rights.

The men who founded this Republic took a little part from the flowing stream of human rights and set that little down in words. That is our Constitution. These men knew the manner of berth of the common law that safeguards the rights of our daily life. They knew that a tradition, rooted in good principle and tested by the usage of generations, would become the common law. It would protect the rights of liberty, proclaimed in the Constitution that they wrote.

Thus good principle and usage tested by generations of men have made this the common law of the United States: That no man should be eligible for a third consecutive term as President.

Decision Irrevocable

Unquestionably, the people of this country may repeal that law. The election of the third-term candidate would repeal it. For the first time in the history of the country, a political party has nominated a man for a third consecutive term. For the first time in our history, the American people will vote directly on this question.

You must determine whether that law is a good or bad one. You must determine whether it is a wise precaution of freedom to limit the time any man may hold power over you. Your decision upon that point will be irrevocable. If you repeal that law, there will never again be any limit upon continual self-appointment of Presidents in office, by any means. The question of free government involved is much more important that the personalities involved. If this principle dies, it will be dead forever.

What shall guide us to a right conclusion on this important question? One course is to heed the accumulated wisdom of men skilled in the art of government, with experience in the office of President and of whose sincerity and integrity there can be no question.

When George Washington came to the end of his second term, Europe was convulsed by war. The most powerful nations, France and England, were at each other's throats. Spain, Austria and many German and Italian states were utimately embroiled. Efforts were being made by the several belligerents, and by factions in this country, to force abandonment of our neutrality and to get us into their wars.

We were young and weak and not united. Belligerents were on our borders and were violating our rights on the high seas.

Those times were as perilous as these. Washington, by the common consent of all his countrymen, was best qualified to see us through by taking a third term. He was qualified not only because he had had experience as President, but because he had character. But that very character, that very quality of greatness which made a third term safe in his hands, impelled him to renounce it.

He refused a third term in order deliberately to set an example of moderation and patriotism to his successors and until now that example has been heeded.

Since Washington's time, and until the appearance of the New Deal Party, the Democratic Party has been an active advocate of this rule. Its first President, Thomas Jefferson, crystallized the tradition to make it a settled rule of our law.

Pressed by the Legislatures of States to take a third term he refused to disregard the sound precedent set by Washington.

The great popular hero of that party, and of the country, Andrew Jackson, reinforced that rule by obedience to it. He earnestly urged a limit on the time that Presidents might serve, a limit shorter than eight years.

At the hundredth anniversary of Washington's refusal of the third term, the Democratic Party declared it to be "the unwritten law of this Republic, established by custom and usage, and sanctioned by the greatest and wisest of those who founded and have maintained our Government, that no man should be eligible for a third term of the Presidential office."

Principle a Good One

This is the common law of the United States.

The principle against a third term is a good one. That principle is this: That should any one man become so powerful as to continue himself in office beyond two terms, our democratic system is in distress and jeopardy.

The longer any man remains in office, the greater grows his desire for power; the more convinced he becomes that his ideas are the only sound ideas, the less important to him become constitutional safeguards. We should fear much more the man whose original motives have been pure and good, for he will more easily convince himself that further increase of power, and greater release from constitutional limitations are required that he may do what it seems to him ought to be done. That, to some extent, has already happened here. The determined effort to pack the Supreme Court is evidence of it. So is the effort to purge the Congress. So is the fact that our current President has never surrendered any of the "emergency" powers given to him by Congress.

The third-term candidate has made the argument that we can protect ourselves against Presidential self-perpetuation in office by our votes at the end of the third term. Another argument is that a change of leadership at this time would be unwise. Finally, the third-term supporters say that Mr. Roosevelt is the indispensable and sole man capable of taking us through this period.

In theory, the people can protect themselves at the polls, if their votes are free and are counted. But practically, it is extremely difficult.

The powers of the office of President have always been great. And we know today that the powers of any President have been vastly increased since 1933. We saw this summer that he has complete power to renominate himself as often as he likes. We are testing whether his power to reelect himself is as complete.

Under the New Deal, its third-term candidate has become, and now is, one of the most powerful rulers in the world. Never before has an American President had the opportunity of the third-term candidate to influence the actions of the voters. His powers have been increased to the point where his control of the currency, of communications, of labor, and of agriculture rivals in many respects those of European dictators.

He has felt his power to be great enough to purge those members of Congress in his own party who disagreed with him, such as Senator Tydings, of Maryland; Senator Smith, of South Carolina; Senator Gillette, of Iowa, and Senator George, of Georgia.

After Congress refused to permit him to pack the Supreme Court, he achieved his end by appointing five men subservient to his will to be a majority of its judges.

He may grant or withhold his bounty to the 15,000,000 people who are dependent on Federal relief.

He controls the letting of hundreds of millions of dollars of contracts.

He is at the head of a horde of more than 1,000,000 Federal employes on the Governmental pay rolls—almost double the number before he took office.

He has under him hundreds of publicity agents, on the public pay roll, who may spend public funds to mislead the voters. He, and his associates in power, have an access to the ears and eyes of the people of this country, such as no other person ever had.

Bear those things in mind and you have some idea of the power of the New Deal.

The American people today have their final opportunity to protect themselves against perpetuation in that powerful office.

In his speech last week, the third-term candidate took to himself, as an achievement, the fact that in August and September employment increased by 900,000 men.

But the WPA rolls increased from the first part of July to the first part of October by more than 150,000 men. More than 150,000 men were added to WPA in the very period that the President boasted of as showing great gains in employment.

In other words, during this campaign, while the President says employment was increasing, the figures show the WPA rolls were increasing.

Why do you suppose that happened? They did it to help perpetuate themselves.

But to make sure that its purpose is achieved, the New Deal party has allied with itself boss-ruled machines of large cities. This alliance of the pose of purity with political immorality is shocking to any man of honor.

It has not been denounced by any of its beneficiaries.

To illustrate the operation of those powers of the President, you need only recall that in the so-called Democratic Convention of last summer, the name of Thomas Jefferson was booed. Senator Carter Glass and other statesmen of that party were howled down by the voice from the sewers, and other trusted leaders of that party were ungratefully cast aside.

Where now is the historic Democratic Party?

Where now is the party of Jefferson, of Jackson, of Cleveland, and of Woodrow Wilson? Why, Wendell Willkie is the only candidate fighting today for their principles.

The American people are aware today. They know what it would mean to repeal the law against a third term.

It means the destruction of our two-party system. It means the complete mastery of us all by a single party, and that party under the orders of a single man.

The Democratic Party—the real Democratic Party—is thus faced this year with a dilemma. The registered Democrats must decide whether they are going to adhere to the principles of the Democratic party, or submit to the unprincipled rule of its New Deal kidnapers.

You cannot be a Democrat, and vote for the third-term candidate.

The principle of Jefferson and Jackson cannot live under a government that seeks power, concentration of power, and the perpetuation of power. The principles of the Democratic Party can be preserved only by repudiating the embryo autocrats who use its name as their mask.

We Republicans believe in the two-party system. We want to preserve the American principles—those traditions which both parties have always undertaken to defend. Those are the principles that both Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln stood for, and would stand for today, united, if they were alive.

This is no more issued between Democrats and Republicans. This is an issue between those who believe in our free forms of democraic government and that wretched and dangerous fiction that would destroy democracy.

Sacred Compact

Step by step, year after year, the New Deal has been leading us down the road toward complete state domination of our lives. It has been taking us along a road that other nations have followed to their ruin. Once we have broken down the third-term tradition, what is to prevent a fourth and fifth term? The New Deal does not give us even a perfunctory denial of such ambitions. And once we have gone that far, what is to prevent an ambitious man from dispensing with elections entirely?

Compared to the principles at stake, I am unimportant and Franklin Roosevelt is unimportant. Before the results of your decision are fully realized, he and I will be gone. Your decision on November 5 will be irrevocable. It will determine whether our children and our children's children will enjoy the rights of free men, or suffer the indignities of enslavement to the all-powerful state.

The unwritten law against a third term is a sacred compact of the living with our honored dead, and with our unborn children. It is your choice. It is for you to accept or reject forever that sacred compact. I know you will not fail.

Dewey Charges U. S. Defense Failure

By the Associated Press

Peoria, Ill., Oct. 28.—Thomas E. Dewey declared tonight that the present Administration "has failed in its highest duty—the defense of the United States of America."

"And so now, we have the result of the blundering of these seven years," the New York prosecutor said in a prepared speech broadcast nationally at a rally here.

DEWEY

"We have the frantic speed-up, the pretended inspection tours, the desperate last-minute effort to cover up the most abysmal of all the New Deal failures."

President Roosevelt, he asserted, "has created this—his worst, and I hope, his last emergency."

Dewey cited what he said were Army reports of several years to support his contention that while European dictators were rearming, American defense was lagging.

"In 1937," he said, "Mr. Woodring (Secretary of War) said in his annual report: 'The United States Army is relatively weaker, compared with armies of other great countries, than it was a year ago.'"

"There it is, on the record," Dewey asserted. "We were making rapid progress backward. But even then Mr. Roosevelt did not, would not learn. The progress backward continued.

"Two years later, in September, 1939, the European war broke out in all its fury. At that time, Gen. Marshall, then Chief of Staff, reported: 'The Army machine is probably less than 25 per cent ready for immediate action.'

"There, in brief summary, is the disgraceful record of this Administration. If this be the indispensable foresight of the indispensable man, then let us have just the common sense of a competent man."

"Think what this would mean if this third term effort should succeed," he added. "In four years more, at this rate, we would be back in the days of the Spanish-American War."

He also charged that the New Deal began to "meddle" with the aviation industry before it had been in office 30 days.

He said that "the newspapers report that the third-term candidate is now looking for a plant to inspect in the State of Illinois."

G.O.P. Win Will Harm Farmer–Wallace

By the Associated Press

Omaha, Oct. 28.—Henry A. Wallace charged tonight election of a Republican Administration would "sound the death knell of fair play for the farmer."

The Democratic Vice Presidential nominee's statement was part of a prepared address broadcast here as the former Secretary of Agriculture brought his campaign to Nebraska for the second time since his nomination.

WALLACE

"The truth is," he declared, "that farmers cannot afford to take a chance of having a Republican Administration in power. A Republican Administration would sound the death knell of fair play for the farmer. And Mr. Martin (Joseph W. Martin, Republican campaign manager) and Mr. Fish (Representative Hamilton Fish, New York) would be chief executioners."

Wallace charged the "bold buccaneers of Wall Street" were in control of the Republican Party.

"The American people can expect anything in the last week of this campaign, as the money lenders and the speculators put forth one last desperate effort to recover their power to exploit the people of the United States. The national unity they want is a unity of subjection to the high-powered men of Wall Street."

From 1921 to 1929 when Republicans were in power, Wallace said "investment trusts and holding companies spread like a deadly fungus through the body of American business, until they finally brought on the almost fatal collapse of 1929 . . .

"We Americans had our sad experience of the effects of a national Republican Administration, in the great collapse of 1932. A stubborn failure to see the value of liberal principles, and a blind confidence based on ignorance, had almost wrecked this, the richest Nation in the world, when the Government at last fell from the nerveless hands of the Republican Party on March 4, 1933."

He said the Nation's "surest guarantee of peace and liberty" would be reelection of President Roosevelt.

Wallace's speech tonight climaxed a whirlwind tour through Iowa today in which he made ten short talks.

Lewis Speech Fails To Sway Thomas

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Norman Thomas, Socialist Presidential nominee, commenting on John L. Lewis' indorsement of Wendell L. Willkie, said today that "to fly in the name of peace from Roosevelt to Willkie is to escape out of the jaws of the lion into the arms of the bear."

THOMAS

Declaring the labor leader's speech contained "sound criticism of the President's failure to end unemployment and his drift toward war," Thomas added, however, that "Mr. Willkie is every bit as much the candidate of the interventionists as Mr. Roosevelt."

The Socialist leader predicted Lewis' indorsement "would swing no labor support to Willkie except in Communist-controlled or influenced organizations."

"In Willkie's bed, along with John L. Lewis, are the latter's arch-enemies, Tom Girdler and Bill Hutchinson (president of the Carpenters Union)," he added. "It looks as if Earl Browder is getting ready to join them, or at least to give them a furtive blessing."

G. O. P. Receives $529,551 in Month

The Republican National Committee reported to the clerk of the House yesterday that it had received $529,521 and had spent $708,987 between September 1 and October 2.

KELLOGG

Contributors of $5,000, the maximum permitted under the Hatch Act, included: Walter Olson, Chicago; W. E. Coyle, Detroit; Reynolds du Pont, Wilmington, Del.; W. K. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich.

The Republican Finance Committee of Pennsylvania reported receipts of $454,035 and disbursements of $601,435 from September 1 to October 23.

The National Republican Congressional Committe filed a report showing receipts of $40,382 and expenditures of $43,679 from September 1 to October 24.

The Democratic Senatorial campaign Committee reported contributions of $2,600, including $2,000 from B. M. Baruch, New York, and expenditures of $2,092 for an unspecified period ended October 26.

Nation to Hear Kennedy Tonight

NewYork, Oct. 28 (AP).—Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, whose return from Great Britain aroused widespread speculation as to its purpose, announced today that he would speak to the Nation in a broadcast over C. B. S. tomorrow night.

KENNEDY

Kennedy, who conferred with President Roosevelt last night in Washington immediately after his return by clipper plane and then declined to discuss the conference, said he would make no other statement today. His broadcast will be at 9 p. m., Eastern standard time.

The Associated Press determined that the Democratic National Committee had reserved time on the C. B. S. network Tuesday from 9 to 10, and that the committee was releasing a half-hour to Kennedy.

Thus a situation almost identical with that of the John L. Lewis broadcast of last Friday night seemed to be in the making.

Kennedy is going to speak, but what he will say and under whose specific sponsorship are closely guarded secrets.

(The New York Sun said that Kennedy had purchased the radio time himself and that the national committee relinquished the half hour "some time ago.")

Cudahy Says 3d Term Is Necessary

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—John Cudahy, United States Ambassador to Belgium, declared today war had become so terrible and dictators so strong that the "issue of war or peace transcends the third term."

This circumstance, he said, in a prepared address at Columbia University, made it necessary to reelect President Roosevelt.

"Jefferson wrote emphatically that while he believed in rotation of elective office, he could foresee an emergency where it might be necessary to continue the same individual in office," the envoy declared. "There is such an emergency now."

The envoy then chided Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, third-term opponent, as a "fifth-term candidate" who "is not moved by any sense of potential danger."

Willkie, McNary Differ, Says Ickes

Salt Lake City, Utah, Oct. 28 (AP).—Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, charged tonight that the Republican Presidential and Vice Presidential nominees stood on opposite sides of the question of distributing public power.

ICKES

In an address written for a Democratic campaign rally here, he declared:

". . . In the matter of the distribution of power from publicly owned hydro-electric plants, the views of Senator McNary, who by now must be feeling very uncomfortable indeed, are diametrically opposed to those of Mr. Willkie.

". . . Mr. Willkie strongly intimated that he favored selling it at the bus bar to private utilities for distribution.

"Senator McNary believes that, since the people have built these great dams with their own money, they should distribute their own power, and Senator McNary is right.

"I might say, parenthetically, that the Republican ticket would make some sense if it were McNary and Willkie, rather than Willkie and McNary, although I cannot conceive of the remotest possibility of Senator McNary, as a candidate for President, choosing Mr. Willkie as his running mate.

"It was Senator McNary, you will remember, who, during the Republican Convention, predicted that, if Willkie were nominated, the Republican Party would not carry a single Western State. This prediction was supported by some 50 Republican members of the House of Representatives and it will come true on November 5."

Teamsters' Official Indorses Willkie

Leslie G. Goudie, of Chicago, president of the Teamsters' Joint Council of Chicago and vice president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, yesterday indorsed Wendell Willkie as "a real friend of labor."

Goudie is vice president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor and organizer in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin and northern Indiana for the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America. His statement, issued by the Republican National Committee, said Willkie "will be of great help in eliminating those racketeers who have climbed into the ranks of legitimate, law-abiding and honest labor unions."

Barkley Recalls Legacy of Hoover

Rockford, Ill., Oct. 28 (AP).—Senator Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, said tonight that Wendell Willkie and his campaign sponsors were "attempting to beguile the American voter into total forgetfulness of the record of disaster which President Roosevelt inherited from Hoover."

BARKLEY

"By the lavish expenditure of money . . . and by the calculated and sinister falsification of the true facts," Barkley said in a prepared radio speech, an attempt also was being made to make the voters forget "the amazing record of achievement" of the Roosevelt Administration.

He added that the present Administration "has had to seek employment for 18,000,000 unemployed, 13,000,000 of whom were inherited from the Hoover Administration and 5,000,000 of whom had been a net increase during the last seven and one-half years."

"Mr. Willkie's statement to the contrary notwithstanding," he said, "employment has been found for 12,000,000 of these 18,000,000, and unemployment is decreasing now at the rate of nearly 400,000 men per month."

Poll Shows Class Favors Willkie

The Republican National Committee said last night that a poll of entire class of 1933 of the Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va., showed 53 per cent of the votes being cast for Willkie, 42 per cent for Roosevelt, 5 per cent undecided.

Lucien M. Caperton, chairman of the Young Republican Clubs of Tennessee, said his reason for selecting the class of 1933 "is that they graduated the same year Mr. Roosevelt moved into the White House. They have started their business and professions during the tenure of the New Deal. Their opinions concerning the New Deal should be significant."

Record Total of Voters Register in New York

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—A record-breaking 6,960,117 persons have registered in New York State for the November 5 election, an increase of 741,783 over the 6,218,334 total in 1936, previous comparable Presidential year.

Sinclair Lewis Urges Reelection Of Roosevelt

Madison, Oct. 28 (AP).—Sinclair Lewis, novelist and lecturer in English at the University of Wiconsin, said today that "it would be catastrophic for the country not to reelect President Roosevelt."

"Several Eastern columnists have stated that I am for Willkie," a statement said, "but the opposite is vigorously true."

"Why shouldn't a good President have a third term?" he said. "That is a false issue propounded by Republicans because they have no other. Why should it be supposed that the President of the United States has only eight years of safe usefulness any more than the president of a bank, or a university?"

Willkie Is Ahead In Mock Election At American U.

Politics hit the campus with a crash yesterday as American University students staged a mock Presidential campaign, complete with speeches, parades, singing and a few eggs.

Hot verbal battles filled Hurst Hall when opposite factions orated, with Robert E. Lake representing the Republicans and Irwin Krasnoff backing the New Deal.

Amidst colorful banners, improvised campaign songs and confusion added by two embryonic political caravans, a campus-wide election was held.

After the tumult died, a count showed Willkie had approximately 60 per cent of the 400 votes cast. Tellers suspected Fifth Column activity when one vote for Browder was discovered.

U. S. Weakened By Roosevelt, Thacher Says

Solicitor General Under Hoover Cheered As He Broadcasts

Thomas D. Thacher, President Hoover's solicitor general, charged last night that President Roosevelt, by failing to achieve economic recovery, has "impaired the strength of the Nation to meet the present crisis."

In a radio address broadcast from the Willard ballroom, where 500 Willkie adherents cheered him on, the New York attorney declared:

"The sinews of modern warfare are in the productive capacity of a Nation, and unless we are to follow the totalitarian peoples into slavery we must restore our ability to produce, under a system of free enterprise, not only the modern instruments of war, but the goods and services necessary to the American standard of living."

Orgy of Corruption

Conceding that the extent of defense needs was "not foreseen until the power of Hitler's armies was felt in Europe," Thacher argued that "recovery from economic chaos" was known as a need as early as 1933.

He added that "a $44,000,000,000 debt is not a good rampart for national defense," and declared that the United States might have had an air force of 50,000 planes if New Deal spending had been for defense instead of "the perfect orgy of corruption" under the CWA and the WPA.

Thacher charged that relief and agricultural benefits were used to influence elections.

Biggest Cheer for Johnson

Biggest cheer of the night came for Walter Johnson, former Washington baseball star, now a candidate for Congress from Maryland's Sixth District. Johnson said he would see that Congress provided "less regulations and more work."

Earlier, Mrs. Edward E. Gann, sister of former Vice President Curtis, attacked the President as a "dictator," and said "Franklin Roosevelt believes in tearing down one class to curry favor with another."

She followed Haven Page, chairman of the Washington Willkie Independent Committee, who told the audience that the country should be led by the representatives of the "plain, simple, middle class."

The Political Arena

Senator Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania, told the Senate yesterday that a "whispering campaign" was being carried on against Wendell Willkie and that attempts were being made to "smear" Willkie's "good family name."

DAVIS

He accused the colored division of the Democratic National Committee of attempting to make it appear that the Willkie family was "intolerant of the colored race."

"Small wonder," he added, that Chairman Edward J. Flynn, of the Democratic National Committee, "seeks to repudiate these malicious remarks."

"This whispering campaign shows the venom and the downright malice of men apparently willing to stoop to the lowest depths to win an election."

N. Y. Court Upholds Ban on Communists

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 28 (AP).—The Appellate Division upheld, three-to-two, today a State Supreme Court order barring the Communist Party from New York's November 5 election ballot.

The Court of Appeals, the State's highest tribunal, immediately prepared to hear arguments of the Communist Party for reversal of the decision. The Appellate Court affirmed a lower court's findings that signatures obtained in two counties on the Communist nominating petitions were invalid. The action was brought by the New York American Legion.

Catholic Paper Finds No Religious Issue

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—The leading editorial in the "election issue" of Commonweal, national Catholic review, says. "In this election no valid issue of religion pushes Catholics to vote, as Catholics, for the Republicans or for the Democrats."

"Whatever 'Catholic' alignment is being speciously pictured by partisans is a falsification of the facts and an injury to the church and State which Catholic supporters of Willkie, as well as of Roosevelt, should deplore," the editorial says.

In the same issue, two editors of the review take opposing sides on the election. Philip Burnham, editor of the Commonweal, in coming out for Willkie, asserts "the third term is the major issue."

C. G. Paulding, associate editor, in supporting Roosevelt, says "the war, the New Deal are the two factors which dominate the election"

Gold Star Mothers Chief Favors Willkie

The Republican National Committee yesterday made public a statement from Mrs. J. W. Cushman, president of the American Gold Star Mothers, indorsing Wendle Willkie for President.

She said she was "not so sure" that the President "would keep his promise" not to send American boys to fight in Europe.

One In Twenty

A quietly cooperative America today awaits the drawing of numbers for its first peacetime draft. At noon Secretary of War Stimson is to pick the first pellet from the goldfish bowl which—the public has been assured—is the same one used in the selection of men for the Army in 1917. Registrants holding the number which comes to his hand will be the first considered for military training, and subsequent numbers will determine the order of examination for 17,000,000 men.

The registrants' eagerness to follow correct procedure was in evidence this week in the District and nearby communities. Officials, adhering to the humane attitude which has characterized preliminaries of the draft, emphasized that failure of men to know their numbers before the drawing would not be a criminal offense. Yet local headquarters in Washington reported large numbers scanning the posted lists. In Alexandria, registrants milled about the postoffice while volunteers from the crowd read names and numbers aloud out of the books.

The public appears to be generally satisfied with the fairness of the selective methods employed—equality of chance in the drawing, followed by consideration of the individual's family obligations and physical fitness. Local boards may find it a delicate task to decide which employees should be placed in the deferred category to avoid disruption of industry. But, as National Selective Service Director Dykstra points out, production for national defense is paramount and must have precedence even over the requirement for military manpower.

Finally, the registrant need not be in too much of a hurry to pack his bag. With 800,000 men to be inducted by June 15, out of the 17,000,000 listed, the individual's chance of being called in that group is something less than 1 in 20—even aside from the possibility that he has dependents or a job from which he should not be removed.

Mr. Willkie On Housing

Wendell Willkie's statement on housing shows that he fully realizes the importance of home building both as a stimulus to our economic life and as a social necessity. His words carry welcome assurance that the next Administration, whether Democratic or Republican, will press for continuance of the work of slum clearance and will also assist and advise private home financing agencies.

In criticizing the Administration's housing policies, Mr. Willkie has dealt a few well-aimed blows at certain vulnerable practices. His charge that the New Deal has failed to admit the real extent of Federal slum clearance subsidies is thoroughly justified. The United States Housing Authority has stressed the lowness of the rentals charged to occupants of subsidized housing projects, but it has not been candid about the costs to taxpayers.

Although subsidies are essential to facilitate the work of slum clearance, some of the lavish methods heretofore employed will have to be abandoned if the program is to go forward. At present the work of the USHA is bogging down, as Mr. Willkie alleges, for lack of funds.

On the other hand, Mr. Willkie failed to give due credit to the impressive achievements of the Federal Housing Administration in stimulating privately financed building through its system of insured mortgages. The FHA neither builds nor subsidizes; it stimulates private financing of home building by insuring lending institutions against losses on mortgages. Half of all new single-family homes now being built are financed under the FHA program. Moreover, the FHA reports that the production of single-family homes in the United States in 1940 will be the highest in 12 years.

Mr. Willkie rightly emphasizes the need for closer cooperation among the various administrative agencies concerned with housing. But valid objections can be raised to his proposal for a single consolidated Federal Housing agency. In accordance with the executive reorganization orders, a good many housing agencies have already been brought under centralized administrative control. For example, the FHA, the Home Loan Bank Board, the HOLC and a few other agencies dealing with housing through private financing institutions are grouped under the Federal Loan Agency.

The USHA is part of the Federal Works Agency. The Farm Security Administration remains in the Department of Agriculture where it seems logically to belong.

There is a good deal to be said in favor of limited segregation of housing agencies which accord recognition to their different objectives and the different administrative methods. Without setting up a single consolidated agency, it should be possible to bring about more effective cooperation among existing housing agencies with a view to developing a well balanced program such as Mr. Willkie evidently has in mind.

The Assault On Greece

The Italian assault on Greece fits into what has long since become the conventional picture of totalitarian aggression.

First came an utterly insignificant incident last August along the Greek-Albanian border. Rome chose to magnify that incident to menacing proportions. There followed a violent Italian press campaign against the Greek government and nation. The purpose was obviously to frighten Greece out of her wits and thus compel her to capitulate to the Axis. When Greece refused to capitulate, another "incident" occurred. Then came an ultimatum whose rejection led to an invasion of Greece by Italian troops.

No one can take seriously the charge made in Rome that Greece's attitude and activities had been provocative. Like all other small nations of Europe, Greece wanted only to remain at peace. The real reason for Italy's wanton action of aggression is simply that the Axis needs Greek territory as a base for operations against the British in the Mediterranean.

Unable to get it by threats of force, Mussolini has resorted to war. The Greeks could have followed the Rumanian example and avoided war by becoming a satellite of the Axis. They chose the harder but more honorable course of resisting.

The armed force which Greece can put into the field is neither large nor particularly well equipped. It is believed to number not much more than 100,000 first-line troops as against the 200,000 said to have been assembled by Italy in Albania alone. Moreover, the Greek air force is negligible, while that of the invaders is large and may be reinforced by German planes and pilots. Under the circumstances, it is difficult to see how Greece can long resist unless immediate and large-scale aid is forthcoming from the outside.

Whence can such aid come? Great Britain, which last year guaranteed the independence and territorial integrity of Greece, has given every indication of her readiness to live up to her pledge insofar as she is in a position to do so. British naval power may play a great part in the developing Italo-Greek struggle. But Great Britain has no troops to spare. Whatever military assistance Greece may obtain will have to come from her neighbors, Turkey and Yugoslavia.

So far there is no indication that Yugoslavia has any desire to enter the struggle, however bitterly she may dislike the Italian assault on Greece. Yugoslavia is almost entirely surrounded by Axis-held territory with large German forces not far from her border. And Turkey's desire to help the Greeks may be weakened or neutralized by Russian opposition.

The gains which Italy may derive from her Greek campaign are problematical. Mussolini's venture across the Greek frontier has given Great Britain the excuse she needed to establish herself in Crete, which commands the important passageway between the Greek mainland and the Egyptian coast. The British can also be expected to use their sea power to the utmost to prevent the Axis from securing naval bases in Greece. And if the British and the Greeks can prevent the war in southeastern Europe from becoming a walkover for Mussolini's legions, there is a possibility that the sparks from that conflict may ultimately ignite the Balkan tinder-box.

All that can be said with certainty at present, however, is that the assault on Greece provides further evidence, if any were needed, of Hitler's and Mussolini's determination to transfer the war from the Channel to the Mediterranean.

Campaign Mud

No one expects a national political campaign to be conducted with the same scrupulous regard for the amenities that would characterize a debate on Egyptian art. It is natural, even though lamentable, that in a campaign involving momentous issues, emotions should rise and many tongues should become loose and irresponsible.

The 1940 campaign has taken on a virulence that has seldom been surpassed. That it would be a "dirty" campaign was evident almost from the start when Secretary Ickes and Senator Bridges matched vocabularies to see which could heap the greater abuse and insult on the other's candidate.

From that point it rapidly became worse. In pro-Roosevelt industrial centers such missiles as metal wastebaskets, tomatoes and eggs have been thrown at Mr. Willkie and his supporters. Yesterday two girls in New York threw a lemon and an onion at President Roosevelt. In Harlem an outrageous pamphlet reflecting on Mr. Willkie's ancestry was prepared for distribution.

In Philadelphia a new low-water mark for smearing tactics appears to have been reached. Billboards have been covered by posters reading: "Save Your Church! Dictators Hate Religion. Vote Straight Republican." This attempt to drag religion into the political arena is particularly reprehensible.

Bigotry was used against Gov. Al Smith in 1928, but not openly nor by any responsible Republican leader or organization. That unfortunate experience should have been sufficient to discourage any future effort to exploit religious beliefs or prejudices for political purposes.

It may be taken for granted that Mr. Willkie will repudiate these posters if they are brought to his attention. His haste in declining to accept the support of certain bigots early in the campaign left no doubt as to his determination to prevent any exploitation of religious or racial issues in his behalf.

Mexico Cooperates

With all their destruction and sacrifice of life and human welfare, the wars in Europe and Asia have not been entirely without salutary influences. They have, for example, helped to stimulate a more pronounced feeling of solidarity among the American republics than this hemisphere has ever experienced.

Mexico's current foreign policy is a case in point. Last week Mexico placed an official embargo on exports destined for Japan. Her action was a gesture of solidarity with the United States because of the tension existing between Washington and Tokyo.

Now Mexican officials have decided that their unofficial action went too far. Because of the economic sacrifices such an embargo would have imposed upon Mexico, it has been lifted so far as private operators are concerned. However, scrap iron and certain petroleum products, which are controlled by government monopolies, will continue to be restricted.

In other words, Mexico appears to have brought her policy into line with that of the United States. And spokesmen for the government have expressed a good deal of anxiety lest the lifting of the embargo as to private operations be misinterpreted here. Should the international situation make it necessary, they say, Mexico will cooperate fully with other American republics in laying down embargoes.

Not all the differences between the United States and Mexico have been eliminated. The expropriation of American oil properties in that country, without compensation to the owners, remains an important issue. It is reassuring, however, to note the apparent eagerness of Mexico City to cooperate with the United States and other countries of this hemisphere in matters of national defense.

In part, of course, this attitude is an outgrowth of our "good neighbor" policy. But awareness of common interests has also been greatly stimulated by dangers arising in Europe and the Far East.

What! No Purple?

Willard Chevalier, publisher of Business Week, expresses alarm over suggestions that the luxury trade be curtailed. He fears the morale of workers will suffer if their supplies of lipstick and lingerie are diminished.

"Take away the right to buy silk stockings from a factory girl," Mr. Chevalier warns, "and you hurt her far worse than some Park Avenue matron." And to support his own analysis of feminine nature, he points out that British publications continue to carry advertisements almost in peacetime volume.

British belief in frills for women is exhibited even in edicts restricting consumption of certain articles not deemed indispensable to the prosecution of the war. Last week drastic limits were placed on the purchase of undies. It was announced, for instance, that henceforth slips and panties would be available in only 19 shades: navy, gazelle, coffee, cloud, new nectarine, new lilac, R. A. F. blue-gray, khaki, new mist, opaline, black, ivory, lagoon, new peach, azure, champagne, rose, nile and pompadour.

On the final day before the effective date of these regulations and new higher taxes, London shops are said to have resembled New York bargain basements on a sales morning.

At last reports, however, the luxury traffic was not thriving in Germany. An enterprising Teuton advertised a product to make every frau and fraulein feel luxurious despite the shortage of fine hosiery. It was a paint which, when applied to Nazi legs, was to look like silk stockings.

The would-be benefactor of womankind was arrested.

We shouldn't be at all surprised if by now the Dove of Peace isn't becoming a little cuckoo.

If anything should happen in this fool world now that would surprise us, we'd be astonished.

Question Of Misstatements

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Mr. Roosevelt stated in Philadelphia that willful misrepresentation of fact had no place in a Presidential campaign or any place else.

Listen to the words of President Roosevelt: "Many governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policies. I regard reduction in Federal expenditures as the most necessary step to economic recovery in this country." Would Mr. Roosevelt call this a willful misrepresentation of facts or a barefaced falsehood?

Mr. Roosevelt stated that the suggestion that this country would abandon the gold standard was a libel on the credit of the United States Government. Was this a falsehood? Again, the President talking: "I promise you on my solemn word of honor that if you elect me President of the United States I will give you a 25 per cent reduction in Federal expenditures and nothing I have stated in this campaign transcends in importance this covenant given the taxpayers of America." Would the President now say this was and still is a willful misrepresentation of facts or a barefaced falsehood? Listen to him again: "The idea of my forming a coalition Cabinet is cockeyed." Was this a falsehood?

Yes, Mr. Roosevelt, you are an old campaigner, but remember even with your magnificent powers of persuasion and your ghost writers and your paid applauders, you cannot fool all of them all the time.

Carpenter Strike

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I note with interest your editorial in The Post of October 21 on the poor carpenter striking at Camp Meade for double time for over 40 hours per week. This attitude does not set very well with us veterans of '17 and '18 who now have sons that will be called for 12 months or more military service at $21 per month.

We remember in the last war carpenters, "hammer-and-saw" men, and would-be mechanics were paid more per hour than front line soldiers were paid for a 24-hour day. These so-called mechanics were wearing silk shirts, hitting the night clubs and having the time of their lives, while we were bucking the Germans 24 hours a day in France for $1.10 per day for the duration.

The kind of barracks these carpenters build any farmer could put up. Why doesn't the War Department pick out the carpenters and mechanics that are registered for the draft and have them put up their own camps? They could save the taxpayers millions of dollars, but maybe the department does not want to save any money.

"T. R.'s Precedent"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your editorial in the issue of October 22, entitled "T. R.'s Precedent," though historically correct to a certain extent, does not include an important detail in respect to the election of 1912.

In his campaign for a second term Theodore Roosevelt voluntarily stated that he considered the unexpired term he was then serving to constitute a first term, and for the obvious purpose of luring the votes of those having scruples against a President serving even a second term he made the statement quoted in your editorial, to wit: "The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance, and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination."

Whether or not this statement had any appreciable effect in accomplishing his election for a second term is immaterial, but it may have prompted him to advance the nomination of Taft at the end of his second term, then having in mind that Taft could keep the seat warm for the next Presidential election when he, Roosevelt, could advance the explanation that he meant three consecutive terms—a conclusion not remotely embraced in the statement above quoted.

Taft liked the job, and was persuaded by the Republican Party to run again, notwithstanding, as subsequently appeared, Theodore Roosevelt was so surprised and became so vindictive that he knifed the Republican Party that had elected him for Vice President and President, by organizing the Moose Party; ergo, Wilson did not defeat Theodore Roosevelt as the Republican candidate, but it was Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt who defeated the Republican nominee, Taft.

"Spotlight On Vichy"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The "Spotlight on Vichy" editorial includes a rather naive statement when it asserts that "the rumors that France is about to undertake active cooperation with the Axis are difficult to believe." In the face of past events it is hard to understand how such a statement would merit a conspicuous position in the press.

Miss Thompson aptly said that America was headed towards "a sort of Vichy fascism" if certain individuals and groups were allowed to hinder our defense and sabotage aid to other democracies. No admirer of Miss Thompson's emotion or logic, I feel that she speaks the truth at a dangerously late date.

Let us agree with Marshal Petain that France is a nation with a rope around its neck; but let us also agree that Marshal Petain and a few other loyal patriots had a hand in fashioning and placing the noose.

Fascism does not come into any country without the assistance and consent of a large part of the population. True, fascism is developed by a corrupt and tyrannical ruling class, but this is possible only after a people have reached the depths of economic misery and mental despair.

Certainly, if the England of Chamberlain and Lady Astor wins, the French people who still cherish the traditions of a French republic cannot rejoice, for the victory would be an empty one.

There are those in England and America who desire "a sort of Vichy fascism"; indeed, there has been no reason to believe that an English victory at the moment would save either France or the British Empire from this fate.

We must clearly define the boundaries of our fight, and understand the issues involved. More than this, we must assure the people of democracy before they will fight for it. If France joins the Axis, it will be because her people have lost faith in democracy because of their betrayal.

New Words In Our Language

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

That was an interesting letter of October 19, in which M. G. Spahr tried to stop the linguistic clock. It combined several qualities: Naivete—in the idea that word adoption is anything of late origin; humor—in the idea that English is in danger of being replaced because a few German words are gaining popular use, it would be a long process at the present rate.

A new high in blood pressure is revealed when a few foreign phrases can cause such feeling. Perhaps we should expurgate our juvenile literature: "Now Dasher! Now Prancer! Now—and—!" and eliminate such words as "kindergarten." Would it be more discreet for a debutante to go out with a "Bo" instead of a "Beau?"

Of course, in a place like Eire, where the language has suffered greatly, it is permissible to insist on "Baile Ath. Cliath" rather than "Dublin"—incidentally this case provides a good example of how difficult it is to keep a language replaced, in spite of great reverses energy is still evident.

The purest language is the one that contacts others least and English does not rank high in the list. One of the well-known languages which has given up the adoption practice completely is Latin. Apparently Spahr knows less about the history of English than about some late additions, further study might bring a return of calm.

For some time English has adopted more words than probably any other language, even setting aside the acquisitions from the late lamented—Latin. One trace of this past is seen in the variety of pronunciation rules in English. Of course alternatives exist: manufacturing new words, which would hardly suit the man in the street (even overlooking the maker's daring) as the artificiality of Esperanto is unpopular and words having some meaning already, are easier to remember than others; in adapting to new uses, words already in our own language, agglutination can be used, which carried to an extreme, would give words rivalling in length the name of the Indian lake Chogagogmanchogagochabunagungamog; or mere translation can be employed—this destroys the living history preserved in words adopted from actual use, besides having more important effects.

Individual languages are like specialists in various fields, they have progressed toward simplification and efficiency in different areas. If a new concept arises in a foreign country why substitute an unwieldly phrase of our own for the original term; "Zeit Geist" takes about half the letters of "Spirit of the Times," three less syllables and has a distinct meaning.

Many new ideas are easier to remember if their names are somehow unique, as is usually the case with the term originally attached. A specially adaptable foreign word is often easier for the man in the street to handle than a translation, for example: Imagine trying to read a newspaper over a shoulder in the hurried manner of Joe Penner ("The Boys from Syracuse") when the headline refers to "The National Socialist Labor Party of Germany" rather than the "Nazis;" or think of being unable to see why there should be a scandal over a Congressman being a member of the "majority" party (not knowing that the Russian translation was "Bolshevik").

As to English having plenty of words, it does, but it shouldn't become static and cumbersome—thus signing its own death warrent, many words should gradually become obsolete as improvements appear. In the distant past it was the select few who read and there was little urge for making the process easier.

But times have changed and there is opportunity for the press to have a good, energetic influence on language through careful use of simplified spelling, word adoption and word adaption. Newspapers are really answering a public demand in this activity, the "American Language" as well as the "American Nation" can profit from the melting pot principle.

Drowsy Drama

THE THEATER quiets. The lights dim. The curtain slowly rises—but on what a scene! Framed in a lavish gilt and blue proscenium we see—downstage, a row of typist desks and chairs in chorus formation; upstage, a background of partitioned offices, each with its little open doorway and no roof, like a row of Atlantic City bathhouses after Labor Day. Through these wee portals one sees here a corner of a desk, there a bookcase shyly peeping out.

While we have heard of many strange sets—plays without any set at all save the bare brick wall of the theater and a chair, plays in which the action took place in the audience, in the rafters, in the boxes, plays with rain tumbling down, and plays with animals gamboling about, never have we seen a play without an audience. And that's just what this one is. The customary playgoers have been done away with to make room for more props and drops. In lieu of rows of eager faces perched on starched and ermine collars, we have rows of stony-faced filing cabinets. Instead of a vibrant mass of expectation, we have an inanimate cluster of cubicled offices.

And the boxes! No tiaraed, perfumed and gold ladies, no gleaming jewels, no gentle, refined rustle and hum, no nothing. All that once lovely and pulsing life has given way to an aura of decay and dust. Stacks of musty papers, old records, and miscellaneous junk are now the only spectators of the drowsy drama which day by day unfurls below.

Certainly this must be only a play and certainly there must be only make-believe offices, for in place of the streamlined, cold efficiency one expects in an office, we find an atmosphere of warm hominess. Here a drooping rose, there a bowl of summer flowers, here a slightly tattered pink rug patiently hushing the footsteps of such intrepid souls as dare enter the sanctum, there, on the wall over the desk where drowses the messenger who belongs to the green and white polka dot blouse, a miniature American flag is properly hung. And somehow we can't help chanting to ourselves, "With a knick knack here, and a knick knack there."

Over in the corner under the ornately scrolled loge boxes a pathetic little gray sweater clings for dear life to the stalwart coat rack as its owner probably clings to her position. We let our gaze wander to the balcony, now a strange hive-like affair of partitions—catacombs in their silent inactivity, and along the ceiling of heavenly blue with its golden stars and elaborate chandeliers. Our eyes come to rest on the vast expanse of the dusty, neglected organ. What mischief starts bubbling about in our brain! Oh, what fun to send forth just one powerful resounding peal from those cylindrical soldiers and then sit back and watch the startled expressions, the commotion—and just rock and rock with laughter!

Regretfully we turn away from the enticing, gleaming pipes and take more minute notice of the players who are slowly taking their positions on the stage. Just as we expected, chorus girls belong to the chorus chairs and desks—so young and so pretty. One is knitting on a pink something or other, one is typing away for dear life, two are hunched together whispering. The little offices upstage still show no sign of life.

As we survey the dramatis personae, we find ourselves hard put to classify them. A most communistic-looking lass with a sweep of clipped gray hair, shirtwaist and tie, and a cigarette holder. A broken-down newspaperman—once an ace reporter on America's greatest newspaper. A quaint, grandmotherly lady. A sweet young thing just out of business school. A former football player who has been around the world with the Merchant Marine. A former brunette who was once a beauty operator. A former politician, a former dancer, many, many former wives, in fact a former anything you can name.

The scene is displayed before us—the actors are in their places—and with our curiosity at fever pitch, we wait for the play to commence. What plot could possibly encompass such a polygot crew? Romance? Adventure? Mystery? Tragedy? Comedy?

Eight hours later—after sitting through a play fraught with inertia, with actors plodding through molasses, carrying papers from here to there and back again, with little groups forming, and, after much nothing, slowly melting away—with one grand finale of hats, coats, and hustle, the curtain descends and we are left alone in the darkened theater, realizing that we have been victims of a great hoax! For this was no legitimate theater where one goes to be amused and entertained—where one can forget for awhile the cares of the world and live enchanted for a moment. No! this was another branch office of the WPA!

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Two Super-Smears

EVEN THOUGH FEW may pay attention to it this week, next week when the election is over many more will wish they had set their faces more sternly against what George Washington called "the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally." For each side in this contest is resorting to a line of argument which, whatever it may be worth as a device for catching votes by bamboozling the innocent, is profoundly injurious to the peace and the security of the Nation.

There is the effort of leading Democrats to make it appear that the election of Willkie will be a victory for Hitler; there is the effort of leading Republicans, and their new friend Mr. John L. Lewis, to make it appear that the defeat of Roosevelt will keep the country out of war. Mr. Willkie's partisans see clearly how deplorable it is to charge Mr. Willkie with being the candidate of Hitler. Mr. Roosevelt's partisans see clearly how shockingly unfair it is to charge Mr. Roosevelt with being a warmonger. But such is the baneful effect of the spirit of party that few voices are raised in impartial and vehement protest against the two calumnies simultaneously. Yet once the votes have been counted, and no matter who is the winner, the very first thing we shall have to do if we are to unite and to hold high our position in this dangerous world will be to undo the mischief, to wash out the stains, to heal the wounds, that are being caused by these two calumnies.

MUCH CASUISTRY has been employed in an effort to demonstrate that the one side or the other was the first to sin. This is a waste of effort. For one foul blow does not justify another. It is the country that is injured when foul blows are exchanged, and if the democratic system is to work, it can only be made to work if, in the vital matters affecting the security of the Nation, the leaders and spokesmen of each party insist upon restraint. Once they fall away from this standard, asking whether a certain "issue" will gain votes rather than whether they have the right to raise the issue, they are contributing to the demoralization and the degradation of popular government.

They are inciting a spirit which, as Washington insisted in the Farewell Address, "unfortunately is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed, but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy . . . It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one part against another, foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion . . . There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true . . . From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume."

SINCE WASHINGTON uttered this solemn warning, nearly a century and a half ago, mankind has seen the rise and then the fall of popular government in a large part of the civilized world. Not the least among the causes of the fall has been the devastation wrought by the excessive and unconscionable development of the party spirit, and so, be it thankless, useless, or naïve to say so in the culminating week of an election campaign, the time to remember the wisdom of Washington is now when it is hard to follow it, now when the spirit he warned us against is rampant, now when the foul blows are being struck.

FOR LET US HAVE no illusions about it. These are foul blows. To say that Mr. Willkie is preferred by Hitler is to strike a foul blow. It is in the first instance a misleading half-truth. For what Hitler is opposed to is not Mr. Roosevelt but the President of the United States, not Mr. Roosevelt's policy but the vital interests of the United States. If Mr. Willkie were President, he would in no time at all be just as unpopular in Berlin, Rome and Tokyo: for at the present time no one can be popular in those capitals who defend the honor and the vital interests of the United States.

But even if it is true that the Axis seeks the defeat of the Administration in office and obviously it does, still we are an independent Nation and we are electing an American President for the American people. It is, therefore, inadmissible that Hitler's likes or dislikes, his intrigues and his propaganda, should influence our judgment of what is best for this country. Whether he likes or dislikes what the people decide, the only admissible position is to say that we shall continue our course regardless.

The mischief in this line of argument is that it misleads the public opinion of the world, making it appear that if Mr. Willkie should win, the Americans will have repudiated the cause of freedom and will be ready to embrace the tyrants. This is a devilishly dangerous misrepresentation to launch upon the world as it is today. It can only weaken our friends. It can only invite the others to think that it is safe for them to provoke us when, in fact, it is not safe for them to provoke us.

THE PARTISANS of Mr. Willkie, who will agree that this democratic, charge of "appeasement" is a foul blow, will—one might hope—also agree that the charge of "warmongering" is a no less foul and a no less dangerous blow. Mr. Willkie knows that it is. In his acceptance speech he spoke the truth when he said that "no man can guarantee to maintain peace. Peace is not something that a nation can achieve by itself. It also depends on what some other country does. It is neither practical, nor desirable, to adopt a foreign program committing the United States to future action under unknown circumstances." If, in August, Mr. Willkie could not guarantee to maintain peace, he cannot guarantee it in October. If in August peace was something which depended on what some other country does, then in October it still depends on what some other country does. And, therefore, when he says that the President's pledge to labor for peace is not to be trusted, what shall we think of his own pledge made in St. Louis in October to do something which at Elwood in August, he said no man could guarantee to do?

The mischief in this line of argument is that it too misleads the public opinion of the world. For nothing could be more dangerous to our peace, or more certain to incite other countries to acts which would lead to war, than to cause them to think that our armament program is a bluff because in the end we would never fight. Our peace depends upon convincing Berlin, Rome, Tokyo, and now perhaps Vichy too, that we are determined to defend our interests and that we shall find the strength to defend them. Let the opposite impression be created, and the danger of war will be immeasurably greater and nearer. If that were not true, if we could guarantee our peace by pledging ourselves not to go to war, why on earth do we arm, why do we conscript our men, why do we dedicate our lives and our fortunes to making this country strong? Is it not obvious that we do these things in the hope that none will dare to attack us, in the determination that none shall defeat us if he does attack? And if that is why we are arming, then we are only disarming ourselves and inviting provocation and attack when we permit partisan politics to issue pledges which look to the world as if we were frightened and bluffing.

THESE TWO CALUMNIES have no place in this campaign. If, unhappily, the spirit of partisanship is too fierce to let men repudiate them both this week, then next week they must both be repudiated as a patriotic duty.

Exploiting The Office

NOTWITHSTANDING letters and editorials to the contrary, I have a higher respect for the office of President of the United States than those who exploit that office for personal profit or benefit or condone such exploitation. The occupant of the Presidency is supposed to guard its honor and dignity, and if he fails to do so, then he himself is guilty of disrespect for the office. That is getting down to the first principles of honesty, but some Americans have so far succumbed to an influence which has been at work for the last seven years as to believe that one who objects to exploitation of the office is guilty of lese majesty. If we have come to that, then we must never impeach a dishonest judge lest we impair the dignity of the courts or expose a venal and unscrupulous editor lest we limit the freedom of the press.

President Roosevelt himself, as Governor of New York, expressed his contempt for "a public official who allows a member of his family to obtain fees or benefits through his political influence." If the cases had been reversed, that is, if a situation had existed in the family and Presidential household of Herbert Hoover in 1932 parallel to that which has been allowed to develop in President Roosevelt's close circle, the party of the first New Deal would have withered Mr. Hoover and his group with fires of scorn.

NOT THE LEAST righteous of the angry men of the opposition would have been Charlie Michelson, who was to see a day when he would be in receipt of $20,000 a year from a rich and soulless radio corporation having delicate dealings with the powerful Federal Communications Commission, yet would continue to sit in at the President's press conferences in the President's private office as a familiar of the place, right under the American flag.

It is often said, on what basis I do not know, that Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt gives all of her earnings to charity. I have never heard or read any announcement to this effect and suspect that those who believe this to be true have carelessly misconstrued the announcement of several years ago that she was donating to charity the proceeds of her radio orations only. According to John T. Flynn's figures Mrs. Roosevelt would have had $750,000 over and above her radio income. And even if it is true that she gives most or all of this to charity, the question still is not what Mrs. Roosevelt does with the money but to what extent the Presidential office figures in the calculations of those who pay it. Moreover, Mrs. Roosevelt need not give away a dime of this income. By her precedent, another First Lady could make as much or more by her work and showmanship and keep it all.

JOHN N. GARNER stated the correct position when, early in the first term of the New Deal, in rejecting an offer of $1,500 a week for radio work, he said that if the sponsor was trying to hire the Vice President of the United States, the price was too little, and if he was trying to hire John Garner, it was much too much.

It is conceded that Elliott Roosevelt participated in negotiations before the Communications Commission which yielded him a profit of extraordinary size for a boy of his years at the time, and it has since been said by his own representative that he has been earning an income of $1,000 a week as a broadcaster. And, of Jimmy Roosevelt it may be recalled that while President Roosevelt was joyously exposing to public scrutiny the income tax returns of individuals who had displeased him the Administration doggedly refused the demand of a Massachusetts Congressman that Jimmy's tax returns be exposed to the same expert, searching inspection. Jimmy finally did reveal his returns and admit that he had sent a wire to his father's secretary bespeaking special kindness for a rich businessman who was about to call on Mr. Roosevelt because, as Jimmy's wire said, "He is important to me in a business way." But the return never was put to official expert public analysis, which is a far different thing.

AFTER THAT Jimmy was given a White House job at $10,000 a year, and his mother became an official of his insurance company, which had dealings with firms beholden in various ways to the Roosevelt Administration.

Forbes Morgan, an uncle of Mrs. Roosevelt, had a Federal job for a while, drew $15,000 a year as treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, and shortly before his death received a strictly political appointment as a front man for the liquor interests at $100,000 a year, including the income tax.

If we have come to the point, or depth, of believing that such conduct is consistent with the honor and dignity of the Presidency, then we have descended far from the ethical level expressed by President Roosevelt himself, when, as Governor, he said with that scorn which no one can give voice to more eloquently than he: "What of a public official who allows a member of his family to obtain fees and benefits through his political influence?"

Looking War In Face

By Mark Sullivan

Western Islands Of Invaded Nations

THE UNITED STATES, without its intention or wish, moved one step closer to looking the European war in the face. When Hitler demands of France the right to use French possessions in Africa as bases for his attack upon Britain; and when France apparently assents, as she cannot help—that makes more ominous for us the matter of American possessions of France and other conquered countries.

Hitler controls France—and France owns two islands off our coast near Newfoundland, other islands in the West Indies, and a bit of South American mainland. Hitler occupies Denmark—and Denmark owns Greenland, on the American continent. Hitler occupies Holland—and Holland has dependencies in the American Hemisphere.

Hitler, by controlling these countries, controls their American dependencies. To those dependencies Hitler has the degree of title that is acquired by conquest of the mother countries—and that is just as much title as the conqueror chooses to assert. We can say Hitler owns those American dependencies, for he can own them if he says he does. The principal difference between Hitler and ownership lies in the factor of physical possession. Hitler has effective ownership, but not possession.

WHY DOES he not possess them? It is only because he cannot get to them. What keeps him from them? It is the British fleet.

If Hitler conquers Britain and thereby gets possession of the British fleet; or if the British fleet is materially destroyed in the final fighting; or if the British should scuttle their fleet (as the Germans did at the end of the World War) —in any of those events, Hitler has an open way to those American dependencies. He can come and set up the swastika flag, take possession, add possession to title, become completely the owner.

Now about those American dependencies, the United States has a fixed policy, two or three policies, all to the same end. By the Monroe Doctrine, in existence for 120 years, we say we will not let any foreign power acquire new possessions in the American hemisphere. Again, by recent agreement of the American republics, those in Latin America and ourselves, we declare the same thing. We declare that if any American dependency now in possession of one foreign power, such as France, seems about to be transferred to another foreign power, such as Germany, we, the American republics, will not permit the transfer. Yet again, most of these American dependencies are so close to our own continental shores, that as a matter of national defense we cannot permit them to pass into the ownership of any power that may be a threat to us. It is absolutely certain that we will not let those American dependencies of conquered countries pass into possession of Hitler.

WHAT TO DO about it, and when to act? Certainly we will not wait until Hitler actually takes possession, and then undertake to oust him—that would be utter folly. We can hardly even wait until Hitler's ships and troops are on the way over, and hurry to prevent his landing.

For the moment there is no imperative need for hurry on our part. So long as Britain resists, so long as the British navy remains, there is no urgency upon us. We must be steadily vigilant, always ready. If at any time it seems likely there is real danger of Britain being conquered, we must act. We must act in the exact psychological moment between the probability of conquest and the actuality. We must act not only with respect to the French, Dutch and Danish dependencies, we must act also about the many dependencies of Britain in American waters—for obviously, if Britain were to be conquered by Hitler, the British possessions in America would at once have the same status as the dependencies of other conquered countries.

One possibility must be mentioned, without necessarily giving weight to it. Hitler, if and when he should conquer Britain, might postpone taking possession of any of these American dependencies of conquered countries. He might say he never intends to take possession. He might arrange for the conquered countries a status by which they would continue to have some kind of national existence, and continue to administer the American dependencies.

BUT IF the United States should rely upon Hitler's word in this respect, the United States would be very foolish. To rely upon that would be of the nature of appeasement. Every nation that has relied upon Hitler's word is drinking bitter rue today, literally every nation except his present partners, and their day of rue will come.

What to do about it? Nothing drastic immediately, and nothing excitedly ever. It may never be necessary for us to seize those American dependencies. It becomes necessary only as and if destruction of the British fleet is in sight. Meanwhile, our clear policy is to help the British fleet in existence, which means help Britain in every material way. This is the policy of President Roosevelt, often repeated. It is the policy of Mr. Willkie, often repeated. No outcome of the election will interrupt this policy.

Country Parson

THE AFFINITY of a small-town church to one's social standing in the community is shown in Hartzell Spence's "One Foot in Heaven: The Life of a Practical Parson" (Whittlesey House, $2.50) —more than in that other "country parson" book, Dr. Gilbert's "Forty Years a Country Preacher," published last spring. For Dr. Gilbert is a "missionary" parson in Connecticut, supported by the city folk to save the rural heathen; and Mr. Spence's father, about whom his book is written, was a Methodist preacher with a succession of parishes in Iowa, Nebraska and Colorado. And he was a successful parson; he had six parishes in some 30 years, and he never left one with less than a 25 per cent net increase in its membership. He was 6-foot-1 of man, and you seemed to hear an organ playing "Onward, Christian Soldiers" when he came into the room.

This is Hartzell Spence's version of the preacher's problem: "To be worth his salt, a preacher must be sincerely pious, narrow to the point of bigotry in his private life, a master politician with both his parish and the higher church organization, and a financial juggler just a step up the heavenly ladder from Wall Street. Above all, he must have a quick wit, the courage of a first-century martyr, and a stomach that will not complain of meager rations. If he possesses these qualities and a wife who will neither offend anyone nor outshine her husband, he is eligible for a country parish. To climb to a city pulpit he must have still other qualifications: . . . the oratorical fire of Savonarola . . . a society doctor's bedside manner." . . .

EVERY PARISH has its politics, and perhaps Midwestern Methodist churches in the early years of this century had more than their share. Times were changing, fast. The Rev. Mr. Spence learned quickly; his first sermon lasted an hour and a half, but ever after that he stopped at 24 minutes. (My own parson father never felt that he could do justice to a theme in much less than an hour.) Mr. Spence, in his younger days, could be shocked at a mild oath; by war time, when he served as chaplain, he was able to compliment an Italian stockyard worker, who had struck out in a ball game, on the art displayed in his performance. The Italian had cursed steadily for two minutes and 20 seconds without repeating.

Dancing, smoking, drinking, gambling and adultery were sins almost on a par in these earlier days; a minister felt disgraced when his son was seen attending a Sunday film; and Mr. Spence would no more have thought of deliberately evoking a laugh from the pulpit than of taking a swig of gin. His technique changed; he ordered from the Methodist Book Concern a set of books called "Wit and Humor of America," and took to studying Mark Twain. It helped. And Hartzell Spence, on his last visit to his father, was astounded to discover that the good Methodist was buying, each week, a chance on the raffle of Father O'Reilly's St. Bernard dog, conducted by the Women's Guild of the Catholic Church . . . Only a quarter century before, his father had been threatened with a trial for heresy, because he had suggested that the parochial schools weren't bad.

The Once-Over

By H. I. Phillips

Dealcoholized Football

How football has changed since prohibition! Sobriety has gone so far at these week-end spectacles that a drunk attracts attention. Under the dry era a sober spectator was the one who was a sensation.

Football is no longer something associated with a bottle, a lapse of memory and a week-end of bismuth, regrets, apologies and low visibility. It can be taken dry again.

The game that was, under prohibition, largely a boon to old bottle collectors and the alcoholic institutes has swung so far the other way that it is nothing for a fan to look another fan's flask in the face and say, "No, thanks."

Observing the scenes at the football games these week-ends, it is hard to remember that only a few seasons back, and for more than a decade, the scenes in the stands were a combination of Dante's "Inferno," Shubert's "Hellzapoppin," the "Last Days of Pompeii" and "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

All it lacked was an adequate supply of police wagons.

It took a staff of hundreds to sweep up and cart away the broken glass after every game. The oversized flask was in its glory, but it was considered a little reactionary not to bring along a quart bottle.

Those were the years when thousands of fans never got to their seats sober and never got back to their own autos unassisted.

You could turn to the fan at your right or left and ask, "What's the score?" and get the reply, "Is that so? You mind your business and I'll mind mine."

Compulsory equipment on the football trip included corkscrews, paper cups, non-leakable suitcases, identification disks and a vocabulary limited in the last period to "Leggo," "Izzat so?" and "You and who else, buddy?"

For every football player carried off the field there were 50 carried out of the stands.

The rooting had that strange quality found when at one and the same time you hear a street fight, a political speech on a faulty radio, a rumble of trucks over a wooden bridge and the finals in the Interstate Barber Shop Quartet Contest.

The feature of football in those days was the great game of "Auto, auto, who's got the wrong auto, and what of it?" played in the parking spaces after the last gridiron hero had fallen and the last bottle had clattered down the stone steps.

If you got home in the car you started out in, it was a lucky break. Days after the contest the fan who went to the game in a pink sedan discovered that he had come home in a blue town car.

But it always worked out all right. Not liking either blue or pink, he could change it for a red one the following Saturday.

What an era! What an age! What a nightmare; Throw out the ball, boys! Now we can see it.

You may heckle other people—
It's a long established right—
But if you heckle me, boy,
Put up your dukes for a fight.

People often heckled Lincoln;
Washington was heckled, too;
But they were old-fshioned softies
Who did not know what to do.

Voters heckled Woodrow Wilson,

But they weren't much as punchers
As their timing was too late.

The Word the Greeks Have for It Is—WAR!

'Per Il Duce . . . !'

1. "FOR IL DUCE" is the battle cry of 200,000 steel-helmeted troops of the modern Italian army invading Greece. The 10 divisions that began the advance across the mountainous Albanian border are backed by artillery and warplanes

2. FASCIST AIR FIGHTERS soared in bombers across Athens, ancient capital of Greece, four times in the afternoon yesterday, drawing fierce antiaircraft fire. They attacked the 2,500-year-old port of Piraeus, 4 miles south of Athens

3. THE ITALIAN FLEET reportedly was engaged in a battle with units of the British fleet off Corfu as Greek soldiers stubbornly opposed the onrush of the Italians on land

New Theater of War—Rather than bow to Italian demands for Greek territory, King George II threw the nation's 100,000 soldiers into battle yesterday against 200,000 Italian troops that crossed the Albanian border (2) as the Italian navy shelled Corfu (1). Ancient Athens (3) had its first air-raid alarm an hour after the Italian ultimatum expired. No bombs were dropped. King George of England and Prime Minister Winston Churchill promised Greece every possible help and British naval units, reportedly sent from Malta (6) and Alexandria (7), occupied the strategic Greek island of Crete (11) and a small island and airdrome off Corfu. Announcement in Belgrade (8) said Yugoslavia would remain neutral. Air-raid precautions have been ordered throughout Bulgaria (9). Troops from Turkey (5), which terms the invasion of Greece a threat against the Dardanelles, were reported to have moved into Thrace and eastern Greece. Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini met in Florence (4) to discuss the war. Rumor in Balkan capitals had it that Soviet Russia (10) was preparing to take over the Dardanelles "protectively" as a safeguard against a possible Axis grab. The Greek fleet was reportedly being assembled in the harbor of Salonika (12)

Beleaguered Capital—Ghosts of ancient Athens probably shuddered in their shrouds yesterday as the capital of Greece got its first hint of aerial warfare. From Lycabettus hill, antiaircraft guns opened fire on raiding Italian bombers

'Dia Tin Patrida . . . !'

1. "FOR OUR COUNTRY" (Dia Tin Patrida) is the cause of the Greeks. King George II (left) and Premier Metaxas (right) refused to bow to Il Duce's demands and began the Battle of Greece

2. ON LAND, 100,000 Greek soldiers face the Italian invasion. Most of the army is massed behind the "Metaxas Line," built by the premier-dictator along the Greek-Albanian frontier. Don't be fooled by their fancy pants, they're hard fighters

3. ON SEA, the Greek fleet, topped by a rebuilt cruiser and an air corps placed at 125 planes, will face the Italians with aid from British Mediterranean squadron

The 'Nature Lovers'

THE BACK SEAT chatterer rather than the back seat driver is the real menace of this country today, believes Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, president of the Do Something About It League.

Mrs. DeGoofey

"Just back from a motor tour to observe the turning of the leaves, Mrs. De Goofey announced she would start a reform of fall motoring.

"Nature loving in motor cars—and understand I am not referring to petting—is urgently in need of regulation," the famous reformer declared yesterday at her press conference.

"During my recent trip to see the October oaks and maples," she continued, "I was literally talked to death by my companions, who not only had to point out every sumac bush along the way, but also had to keep up a constant babble about Roosevelt and Willkie and Dorothy Thompson and Gen. Johnson and what happened to friends of theirs in Podunk or Kalamazoo.

"What is worse, I couldn't finish a sentence myself without someone's breaking in to say, 'Just LOOK at that poison ivy,' or 'Wouldn't you simply LOVE a dress that color'."

Cocktail Chatter In the Great Outdoors

"I have long felt there was too much talk in motor cars. Most persons, as soon as they get in one, seem to think they are at a cocktail party and bound to start being vivacious. What all of us need is a little silence. We are talked to death at our homes and at our offices, and it does seem we could have a little peace in automobiles, especially when we are out viewing vistas that are supposed to enlarge our souls rather than our vocabularies."

Mrs. DeGoofey also announced she would start an adjective contest to unearth some new words of description to take the place of "lovely, marvelous" and "magnificent."

"The best way of admiring the scenery," she declared, "would be to remark 'Such beauty leaves me speechless,' and to mean what was said."

All sorts of abuses are being perpetrated under the guise of fall motoring, Mrs. DeGoofey declared.

"For instance," she said, "thousands of people are piling in motor cars and going out in the country ostensibly to see the trees, when their real purpose is to pay surprise visits to all their acquaintances who are so unfortunate as to live in rural and suburban districts.

The Chummy Friend Who Owns a Car

"Now, as everyone knows, I have campaigned all my life against the surprise visitor, and I intend to see that he—or rather she—does not gain a foothold again under cover of being a nature lover, or a collector of apples and cider."

"Why do you hold women responsible for all the evils of fall motoring?" protested a representative of the Women Are as Good as Men Magazine.

"I don't," replied Mrs. DeGoofey. "Men motorists need a lot of overhauling, too, and I am going to see that they get it. Women all over the country are writing urging me to do something about the husband who, when motoring, dashes madly on absolutely refusing to stop for his wife to haggle with the proprietors of fruit stands or to buy bunches of bittersweet or pick bunches of weeds.

"Women also are appealing to me to do something about the man who, when he gets lost, never will stop to ask directions. I understand there are family parties who have been driving around in the mazes of Maryland and Virginia for years because the men at the wheels are still studying their road maps and refusing to ask directions."

"Do you expect to do any fall motoring yourself, Mrs. DeGoofey, and if so, with whom?" asked a gossip columnist.

"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "I am going out this next weekend with a party of robots kindly provided by the General Electric Co."

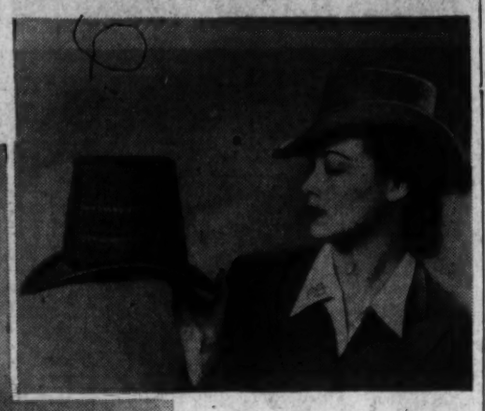
Styles and Their Sources



By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

New York, Oct. 28.—The Museum of Costume Art is attracting almost as much attention as the election, and virtually stole the show this month from the Southern-wear fashion presentations. Hundreds of both lay and professional style-minded women filter into the doll-like museum in Rockefeller Center to see for themselves how designers find inspiration for the clothes they make.

Although the museum was established three years ago it wasn't until the decease of Paris that the American woman began to interest herself in style sources and creators' names.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Her Husband Is Kind, Thoughtful and Sweet, but He Gives Her No Affection, Beyond Perfunctory Kiss At Greeting and Parting; What's Wrong With Him?

DEAR MARY: On several occasions recently, you have discussed so-called "emotional maladjustment" in marriage. While you are on the subject, I would like your opinion of my problem. My husband is a wonderful man in many ways, but he never gives me any warm affection. The most I get is a perfunctory kiss,—when he leaves for the office, when he arrives home in the evening and when we say "goodnight."

Aside from these "duty pecks," there is never a gesture of love or praise or even complaint. He's home every evening, so I assume there is no other woman. He's on time for dinner, and when it's over, he reads until bedtime, and all during breakfast, too. I never go out of evenings, as he prefers to stay home and I don't want to be away from him.

Both of us are 40 years old. We have been married four years and have no children, as he doesn't want any. I was married once before, the marriage ending in divorce before I met my present husband. We went together several years before we married. We have a lovely, comfortable apartment and a car, and we spend each week-end going for a long drive and dinner.

I have kept my position, turning over my salary to his bank account. I supervise the cooking and give him good meals. He has a good job and finances the household. My salary goes for joint recreation and saving and my personal expenditures. Both of us do our part. There is no trouble that way. My only quarrel is with his lack of affection.

Yet at times he is kind and sweet and very thoughtful. And I love him very much. So what's wrong with our marriage? He was orphaned at 17 and thrown on his own resources. He got ahead on his own power as he really is a very smart man. Today he has a responsible, well-paid position. Until we married, he never had a home and I have tried in every way to make him comfortable.

I know he is happy and content and I wouldn't for the world let him know how melancholy and cheated I feel. By nature I am carefree, happy and very affectionate, but nowadays I am terribly unhappy. If only he would give me more of himself, in real companionship and affection! At times I want to scream out loud at the quietude of our evenings. But instead, I sit there fighting my bitterness, telling myself I'm being foolish, trying to overcome my heavy-hearted resentment of his indifference, which overwhelms me, night after night.

I notice other wives have made this same complaint. Miss Haworth, could it be the Washington climate that ails these men, who can't do enough to please us before marriage and who settle down afterward into an attitude of chronic neglect? After reading your column and comparing notes with some of my married friends, I know the problem isn't peculiar to my husband. What is wrong? And what is the solution?

M. V. K.

Survey Points Duty Of Husband and Wife

DEAR M. V. K.: Offhand, it appears that you have married a man best descri'.d (in the vernacular) as " a stick." I daresay romantic manifestations or poetic expression of 'ove are alien to his everyday experience, so that he would feel (as he might say) "like a fool" if he were to attempt to incorporate them into his domestic scheme of things.

That he is, of course, more of a fool for neglecting to court you tenderly after marriage as before goes without saying. Indeed, according to an article published in a recent issue of a popular magazine—based on professorial study of approximately 1,000 cases—a man cannot consider himself a good husband, even though he may have all the sterner virtues, unless he tells his wife often that he loves her! But his wife, on the other hand (according to this gem of research, must herself be always "neat, fragrant and charming," if she expects him to do so.

And this may bring us near to the solution of your problem. One wonders just how much effort you have made (or are making) to charm your husband's mind and senses, since becoming his wife. Remember it is woman's business to "set the pace" in marriage. As I once heard a smart man say, "the woman establishes the tempo in every man-woman relationship." It is her prerogative to lift the man up, drag him down, or accept him "as is."—if she's satisfied with that.

It is natural for man to be the aggressor in matters of sentiment, entirely without provocation, during courtship. But after marriage a subtly wise wife assiduously tends the fires of romance with behavior so gracious and tender, and with appearance so exquisitely feminine, that her husband falls more (rather than less) in love with her by the minute. (Which reminds me of an explanation I heard a man give once, for loving his wife more on their tenth anniversary than he had in the beginning. He said: "She's so clean, in mind and body. And she has such a lovely disposition. And she's so considerate of me!")

A wife who craves graceful compliments from her husband should take the lead in thus complimenting him—never missing the appropriate opportunity for doing so sincerely. If she wants his mental companship, she must inform herself on such subjects as interest him, and with persuasive intelligence inveigle him into animated, pleasant discussions. If she would stimulate or retain his appreciative lover-like interest, she must prettify herself without ceasing—since husbands are just like other men, in recoiling from the drab or mussy in feminine get-up.

Finally, a wife should dare to speak frankly to her husband about his hurtful inattention, if the condition persists despite her best indirect efforts to correct it. His neglect may be due to downright ignorance of her expectations: or ingrained timidity toward women, which he needs outspoken encouragement in overcoming; or chronically lowered vitality which he has long limply accepted as "natural to him." but which she, by tactful insistence, might induce him to cure, with a doctor's help.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Modern Nursery Has Charm, Fewer Gewgaws

Modern Furnishings Are Streamlined And Sanitary

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Today's practical and hygienic baby is a far cry indeed from the voluminously clothed infant of other days who traveled in fantastic carriage with huge wheels, scrolls of reed and topped with a fringed umbrella. So it's not surprising that today's baby should have a nursery with less lace but more crisp charm than nurseries in the good old days.

Such a modern nursery was one we saw today. The furniture was of sleek trim contemporary lines, no gewgaws, streamlines, rounded corners, a white enamel finish as smooth as porcelain. Yet the room itself was not offensively modern because the small patterned blue and white wall paper on the walls had a quaint air about it. The same design in a cotton print was used to slip cover an armchair and to make the bedspread and a small quilt, while windows were hung with full fresh white muslin curtains. The spread and slip cover were finished with muslin ruffles—everything, needless to say, made to go into the wash.

The floor was covered in white rubber tile with an over-rug of soft blue broadloom for warmth when baby reaches the crawling and toddling stage. Lamps and accessories were all of white.

A cleaner, prettier effect than this blue and whiteness for a nursery it would be hard to find. 'Twas no less babified because it wasn't pale blue or pink involved with net and ribbons. And think how much more comfortable for baby and practical for mother! Another asset was the fact that a room like this would grow old gracefully—the background being as congenial for an older child as for a baby. Even the furniture, by a few shifts, could be adapted for later years, since it was that popular type consisting of units that, separate, are child size but combined are for general use.

New Wall Fixtures

It seems that the lighting manufacturers went to sleep at the switch for ten years or so. Now that they've awakened to the fact that lamps have stolen the spotlight from wall fixtures, they're all of a flutter over the possibilities of new designs that will help bring fixtures back in. And from present indications there are going to be some smart and dramatic and very new ideas in illumination before long.

Mrs. Walter H. Maloney, Music Teacher, Turns Democratic Campaign Orator

THESE ARE busy days for Mrs. Walter H. Maloney. Not only does she teach music at the Sidwell Friends School and serve as chairman of the Democratic Absentee Voters Bureau; she suddenly has become an orator as well, and finds her venture into this new medium of expression an exciting experience. "I've always been a singer," she explains, "but until last January the very thought of making a speech made me feel sick. Then, during the winter, I decided I was bored and needed something new to do, so I started public speaking lessons. At the end of the term I was floored to receive a prize for being the best speaker in the class.

Mrs. Maloney

"This month things started happening all of a sudden. I took part in a debate at Pierce Hall; a Congressman inserted both my speech and rebuttal in the October 10 Congressional Record. Later I spoke at a Democratic rally here as representative of the Women's National Democratic Council, and two days later received a wire from the Democratic speakers' bureau in New York. I'm about to fly there now to join a motor touring different parts of the city—I'll speak twice a day . . . Am I still bored? I'm so busy I'm going to write a column called 'My Daze.'"

When the women clerks working for the D. C. selective boards tell their grandchildren about Registration Day, no doubt they'll all mention the curious behavior of young men trying to name the color of their own eyes. Almost to a man, the registrants would flush slightly at the question, shoot sidewise glances at their neighbors, toe imaginary arcs on the floor and finally stammered shyly, "Well, what would YOU say?"

In case four Czecho-Slovakians are puzzled about some high jinks which occurred in front of their legation the other night, here's the explanation. The cigarette tin they discovered under the doormat contained the next clue in a treasure hunt being held in the neighborhood. The group of people who saw them throw the tin into the bushes and promptly went in after it were the participants, fearful lest they lose the trail of the treasure. They also were a little fearful lest they be mistaken for enemy aliens, so, they took pains to open the box and remove, not a bomb, but a slip of paper. "Just an old American custom!" they shouted to the Czechs, waving the paper and retreating hastily in the direction of the next clue.

Some streetcar conductors have an embarrassing habit of shouting "Fare, please!" after people who absent-mindedly neglect to drop their tokens in the coin box. But there's a Friendship Heights conductor who's more considerate. He waits until the careless one has found a seat and the other new arrivals have been accounted for. Then he goes quietly down the aisle and whispers a reminder in the passenger's ear.

Football Coat For Movie Star

Hollywood, Calif.—Matriculating misses should glean inspiration from the collegiate clothes Olivia de Havilland is wearing off-screen now.

Fall means football and football means a coat that will make a girl as important as the score to the man she's with. Olivia is certain her great-coat in moss green fleece fills this bill. Occasionally she alternates with a full length coat in silver raccoon and a stocking cap turban of taupe wool jersey.

For the college girl trying to filch from the male wardrobe and yet strike a happy mean between the yell leader's gaudy blazer and her own somber suede coat, Olivia feels she has a ripe suggestion in her own long-torsoed jerkin. The front is a sweater in blue and gold stripes, the back a monotone of softest blue suede.

No sorority sleeping porch could be breezier than her own bedroom during the rainy season.

Self-Analysis First Step on Road to Charm

Woman Must Ferret Out and Correct Minor Faults

By Ida Jean Kain

YOU can get impersonal, objective advice practically anywhere and on any subject except the impression you make on others. If you ask your friends, they soft-petal your faults rather than risk wounding you. And if you were so rash as to ask someone who is not feeling friendly, she might draw a deep, anticipatory breath and really let you have it.

But, according to Alice Rice Cook, director of the Graduate Center in New York City, it is often some minor personality detractor—quite apparent to others but to which the individual is oblivious—that forms a stumbling block in a career or in social life, or even to the realization of personal happiness.

Miss Cook believes strongly in educating the individual to take an impersonal viewpoint of herself. In her own appraisals every factor which affects one's impression on others—cosmetics, coiffure, voice, weight, posture—is subjected to close scrutiny.

Ferrets Out Faults

A practical psychologist, she never starts with the thing that is obviously wrong and about which the individual might feel sensitive. She ferrets out the faults which are not so obvious and which the individual is apt to regard as easily changed.

But if you are trying to view yourself impersonally, you might as well recognize that the point on which you are touchy is more than likely the one on which you need to do some work. It is a feminine tendency to play up the good points and to try to ignore the bad ones.

As you look yourself over keep in mind this pithy observation of Miss Cook's: "I have never met either a woman who was hopeless, or one who made the most of her potentialities."

Because women seem to be so unconcerned about their hair, Miss Cook usually begins her appraisal with that feature and goes on from there. She says emphatically that the average woman does not have the crowning glory expected of her. And the fault is not with the hair itself, but with the lack of care.

Three Things to Do

If you want that well-groomed appearance, Miss Cook believes there are three things you must do. First, protect your coiffure at night with a hair net, or pin your locks into place and secure them with a ribbon. That will make your hair-do last three times as long. Between sessions with the hairdresser, brush your hair daily. Before going down to have it washed, brush it vigorously for a full 15 minutes to arouse the circulation in the scalp and exercise the roots.

Finally, make a practice of having your hair done the day before it reaches the stage where you yourself can no longer stand the sight of it.

Although this is no superficial charm school, the graduate center does not dismiss lightly a single one of the external factors which contribute to a woman's inner poise and help her to put others at their ease—and that's the real secret of charm.

John Lodge to Appear On Stage Here Nov. 11

Society Expected to Turn Out in Force For Performance of Senator's Brother Who Won Success in the Theater

By Hope Ridings Miller.

WHEN A DEBONAIR scion of the famous Cabot and Lodge families comes to town—even in a professional capacity—it's a matter of social significance. So-o-o, partying plans already are swirling around the forthcoming visit of John Lodge, who will appear here in a stage play week after next.

Hope Ridings Miller

A brother of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and the only member of that famous Boston Back Bay family to seek a career on screen and stage, John Lodge inspired many raised eyebrows among friends and relatives when he deserted the legal profession some time ago. For five years he has devoted himself to the films and has come to the Capital only during vacation periods to visit his mother, Mrs. George Cabot Lodge, of 2346 Massachusetts Avenue.

Last summer he essayed several stage roles at a series of New England playhouses; and now, with his eyes on Broadway, he has the leading male role in Shubert's new musical play, "Night of Love," which will be here November 11 and will open in New York the following week.

When the opus went on the boards in a Boston theater last night, shoals of Mr. Lodge's friends and relatives were there to applaud the play in general and him in particular. Chances are, his appearance at the National Theater here will bring out a mammoth crowd generously sprinkled with Capital celebrities. Senator Lodge, who is now campaigning for Willkie, probably will be back in town for the opening, and Mrs. George Cabot Lodge also is expected to be in the audience.

Another Capitalite planning to attend the opening is Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Washington's Number One music enthusiast. Her protege, Marguerite Namara, has an outstanding role in "Night of Love." A number of Capitalites will recall that Namara made her Capital concert debut here last winter at one of Mrs. Townsend's famous Morning Musicales, and that she was widely feted during her Washington sojourn. One outstanding party she attended was an after-concert party given by Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Adolf Berle. Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss is another well-known Washingtonian who has taken much interest in Namara's career.

Visited Townsends The Past Summer

Last summer the singer and her husband, George Hoy, visited the Townsends at Beach Hill Farm, their home at Schroon Lake, N. Y. Mrs. Townsend has invited both of them to stay with her next week, but a heavy schedule of rehearsals may keep Namara from accepting the invitation. You can depend on it, however, that she will spend as much time as possible with Mrs. Townsend who said yesterday, "Why, she's just like my own child."

"Night of Love" also features Helen Gleason of the Metropolitan Opera and Marjorie Gainsworth, popular chanteuse of smart supper clubs.

Some of the Washingtonians who will be in the audience next week may remember that John Lodge appeared on the stage here once before—but not in a professional capacity. In his Harvard days, he was leading man in the Hasty Pudding Club show that included the Capital on its tour of Eastern cities. He also acted Moliere for the University's Cercle Francais.

For the past five years he has appeared in films made in England, France and Italy. Returning to this country when the war broke out, he and his wife came to the Capital for a visit with his mother and brother. Later, however, he went back to France to complete "Mayerling to Sarayevo," the story of the tragic concluding years of the Austrian Empire, in which he plays the role of Archduke Ferdinand. Incidentally, that film will be presented next week at the Little Theater.

Have Been Living In Connecticut

Mrs. Lodge, who will accompany her husband to Washington, is the former Francesca Braggiotti, a professional dancer before her marriage. She is a sister of Mario Braggiotti, the well known pianist, who married Mary Clow, of Chicago, a couple of years ago. Other members of the Braggiotti family include Mrs. Emlen Etting, of Philadelphia, the former Gloria Braggiotti and Dorillio Braggiotti.

Since returning to America, Mr. and Mrs. Lodge and their two daughters, Lily de Pourtales, 10 and 2-year-old Beatrice have made their home in Westport, Conn. A few weeks ago they moved to New York where Mrs. Lodge has been actively associated with Bundles for Britain, which recently sponsored the premiere of the French film in New York.

Dorothy Grady Expected Today To Visit Cousin

Miss Dorothy Grady, of San Francisco, is expected to arrive in Washington today to visit her cousin, Miss Patricia Grady, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry F. Grady.

Several parties are being planned for the visitor. Mrs. Henry L. Deimel, jr., her aunt, will give a luncheon for her tomorrow and a cocktail party on Friday.

Miss Patricia Grady will give a luncheon for her house guest on Saturday.

Notables See Play Opening

Upper-bracket Washingtonians by the dozens saw "Eliza Doolittle" transformed from a Covent Garden flower girl into a lady that passed for a duchess last night at the National Theater. In other words, George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion," starring Ruth Chatterton, drew a brilliant turnout for its Washington opening.

Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Senator Tom Connally, who had with him a visitor from Waco, Tex., and the Cuban Ambassador, Dr. Pedro Martinez Fraga, who sat in a box with the Dominican Minister and Senora de Pastoriza, and Miss Mercedes Guera were among those glimpsed in the crowd.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

SENORA DE RIANO, widow of the former Spanish Ambassador here, is still another person with an international background hoping to settle in Washington this winter. Coming to the Capital is really like coming back home for her. An American, she arrived in Washington first at the age of 8. Her sister is Mrs. Chandler Anderson of this city. The late Senor Riano was stationed in Washington for 26 years and was at one time dean of the diplomatic corps. His wife has not visited Spain since 1912.

DUDLEY HARMON

The couple live in Newport for a time until the diplomat's death last year. Senora de Riano hopes to find a house here and for the present is stopping at the Wardman Park.

MOTORISTS DRIVING around Kalorama Circle early Saturday evening were probably startled to see a young man in cutaway and a young lady swathed in furs down on their hands and knees in the gutter. But it was only Middleton Train and Mrs. Edward Burling, jr., trying to fasten a tin can to the back of the car which took Mr. and Mrs. Cuthbert Train away on their honeymoon.

AT THE RECEPTION following Mr. Train's marriage to the former Betty Shouse, the guests overflowed into the garden. This stretches quite a way behind the home of Judge and Mrs. Lawrence Groner. Chairs and tables were set up and waiters scurried about with glasses of champagne.

Upstairs the company gethered to admire the many handsome presents given the couple. Among all the silver and glass on display I noticed a very practical looking cookbook.

THE BRIDE and bridegroom, with Mrs. Groner and Mrs. Train, received in front of the living room fireplace. Bowls of russet chrysanthemums were everywhere. Towards the end of the afternoon everybody gathered around to see Mrs. Train cut the cake and join in a toast to both.

Among those who attended the wedding at historic St. John's Church were Miss Mabel Boardman, taking time from her Red Cross duties; Mrs. Frederick Brooke, discussing politics with Mrs. McCook Knox, the latter wearing a wine-red velvet suit and small feather-trimmed hat; Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding, Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Cumming, jr., all neighbors from Georgetown; Mrs. William L. Breese, whose black hat was trimmed with a gay red feather; Mrs. Jarlan Fiske Stone in yellow, the Gale McLeans, Mrs. Donald Hiss in earnest conversation with Mrs. Richard Sanger, who wore a silver fox cape with her dress.

WHETHER WILLKIE wins or loses, the Sangers will sail November 9, for that dream island in the Caribbean, which they own with several friends. Both have been working since early summer in Chicago with the Republican National Committee. The remote island is used occasionally by the owners when they feel impelled to get away from it all.

Realism Marks Preview Here

A piercing banshee wail rang through the auditorium at the Department of the Interior last evening just as a capacity crowd of diplomatic, service-set and residential socialites settled down to the preview of Warner Brothers new picture, "A Dispatch From Reuters." Coming just at the end of a war short by Quentin Reynolds called "London Can Take It" which featured the sound of the air-raid sirens, this sudden noise, like a cross between a London siren and a fire alarm, threw the audience into nervous jitters for almost 60 seconds until an attendant disconnected the ailing air conditioner which caused it.

Earlier in the evening the snapping of photographers' flashlight bulbs heralded the arrival of the limousine trade, which included the Greek Minister, Cimon P. Diamantopoulos, and a party of guests.

Lady Monson, the former Elizabeth Northrup Powell, who is here on an extended visit, accompanied Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin. Lady Monson arrived in this country about three months ago and expects to be in Washington most of the winter.

Parties from the British Embassy included Lady Chalkley, First Secretary J. G. Foster, Counselor Neville M. Butler, and Secretary William Elmslie. Among other notables were the Minister of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph William Close, Lady Broderick and Miss Sheila Broderick, Lady Bradford Leslie, the Chairman of the RFC and Mrs. Emil Schram, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis, Gen. and Mrs. Seth Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Beall Gwynn, Miss Elizabeth Taylor, Senator and Mrs. Robert M. La Follette, jr., Mrs. Bruce Wallace, Gen. and Mrs. William Crozier, Gen. and Mrs. Harry K. Rutherford, Robert Lincoln O'Brien, Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, Mrs. Copley Amory, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, Surgenon Gen. and Mrs. Hugh Cumming, Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris and their daughter, Miss "Peter" Norris, and hundreds more.

Employers Urged to Use Job Bureau

Professional, Skilled Men and Women Are Available, A. A. U. W. Is Told

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor

The greatest problem of the United States Employment Service in the District is to have the employer realize that the service is no longer a labor pool of unskilled workers, but has professional and skilled men and women to place, Edwin Jones, the director, declared yesterday.

Mr. Jones addressed the local branch of the American Association of University Women at its weekly tea, speaking on a program in charge of Miss Nelle L. Ingels, chairman of the committee on the legal and economic status of women.

"Few employers have learned to come to the service for professional people," he said. "They think of it when they need a carpenter, bricklayer, handyman or housemaid but have not yet learned that it has many persons listed in the higher skills and higher brackets.

"It is much easier to find a person to fit a job than to locate a job to suit the qualifications of a person," said Mr. Jones. He pointed out to the women of his audience that they could cooperate by contacting employers of their acquaintance who might have use for skilled or professional workers and letting them know about the service.

The employment service is making every effort to stop "pavement pounding," said Mr. Jones. "Applicants, even if there is a job for which they are qualified, are likely to miss it as they make the rounds in Washington and get lost in the shuffle."

Those sent out from the employment service for interviews on the request of employers are selected entirely on the basis of their qualifications, he said.

The Government has called on the service for many technical and professional workers for positions in which no civil service examination was required, he continued. Approximately 350 commercial and professional women workers are placed monthly now, compared to 95 in 1936. In July, 300 were placed in temporary Government jobs in connection with the recoding and classifying of all Government employes.

Mr. Jones asserted that the average employer still regarded the woman worker as a temporary employe. If she is single, he asks how long before she plans to be married and, if she is married, how long before she will start raising a family.

In the offices of the employment service, said Mr. Jones, the number of women far exceeds the number of men, showing that there is no discrimination against them there.

Mrs. A. K. Balls was hostess at the tea following the program.

Last night Melanie Aslanian addressed the Players Group of this branch at its regular meeting, speaking on "The Living Art Theater."

Farm, Garden Group Meets

The Capital Division of the Woman's National Farm and Garden Association yesterday held its first fall luncheon meeting at the Highlands. The president, Mrs. Jay Winston Johns, of Charlottesville, Va., was here to preside on her way to the meeting of the executive extension committee to be held in New York today and tomorrow.

Mrs. Murray Boocock, of Keswick, Va., national president of the association, will preside at the New York session, at which there will be discussion of the shop opened last spring in Rockefeller Center. The association sponsors this project as an outlet for the products of farm women. Jellies, jams, quilts and all kinds of handicraft are included among the articles for sale there.

One of the purposes of the organization is to afford such cooperation between the farm and city women. The local division sponsored a sale last season but this year will devote itself chiefly to raising money for a scholarship to the Ambler School of Horticulture for Women, which will be awarded to a farm girl.

Mrs. C. A. Reed, who was a guest at the luncheon, told of the work carried on at Ambler and the success of its graduates. Mrs. Kate Voorhis Castle, custodian of the historic division of parks at San Juan Bautista, Calif., also was a guest, attending as an observer, with the purpose of organizing a California division of the association on her return.

The bill authorizing the survey was the result of efforts of Mrs. Thorpe and her committee.

A second speaker tomorrow will be Burton Marsh, head of the national safety department of the American Automobile Association.

Club Hears Ruby Black

Assembling facts in their right relation to each other so as to present a true picture was the hardest job in writing the biography of Eleanor Roosevelt, Ruby Black, the author, told members of the Woman's National Democratic Club yesterday. Miss Black, whose book is just off the press, was honor guest at the club's Monday luncheon.

True facts, unless used in their proper relation, can make a distorted story, she explained. Writing the book, she said, was the hardest job she had even tackled.

Having picked cotton as a young girl in Texas, made soap, helped with the canning and preserving, taught school and swept out the classroom afterwards, only to go home and work late into the night on extension work, Miss Black said she thought she knew what hard work really was. Moreover, she worked her way through the University of Texas by writing, taught journalism at the University of Wisconsin and labored on graduate courses at night and frequently, in newspaper jobs, had to work all night until well past the dawn—but none of this, she told her audience, was as hard as the job she tackled last March, when she started her book on the life of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Miss Black was introduced by Miss Mary E. Kakewell, second vice president of the club, who presided.

Women Shoppers League to Boycott Nonunion Goods

A plan to boycott Washington clothing stores which continue to handle non-union goods was outlined yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the investigating committee of the League of Women Shoppers at the home of Mrs. Michael Straus, on Linnean Road.

Miss Hilda Cobb, an organizer for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was the speaker.

About 5 per cent of the clothing industry is not organized, she pointed out, and this group of eight or ten manufacturers holds down working standards and wages.

The plan of the league here is to write the stores, of which there are eight, asking them not to carry non-union goods. Later members will visit them and explain that the membership of the league—several hundred women—will be notified and will withdraw their patronage, as they prefer to patronize stores where union goods are sold.

It is impossible to tell which clothing is union made and which is not without knowing the manufacturers' names, it was explained, because only closed shops used the union label.

P.-T.A. to Convene Today, Tomorrow

The fourth city-wide Parent-Teacher Institute will convene today and tomorrow at George Washington University. The theme of its sessions will be "Preparation for Tomorrow's Opportunities."

Dr. Carr is responsible for the publication of "Purpose of Education in American Democracy," considered by educators to be among the best documents of its kind in recent years.

Dr. Ruediger, former dean of the school of education, is the founder of the Parent-Teacher Institute.

Lewis Lauded For Speech, C. I. O. Says

Of 5,000 Wires, Fewer Than 10% Are Critical, Statement Asserts

C. I. O. headquarters said in a statement last night that John L. Lewis received "a tremendous volume of favorable response" to his speech last Friday advocating the election of Wendell Willkie.

Out of 5,000 wires received, less than 10 per cent were unfavorable, the statement said.

A large volume of favorable rank and file response was reported from the United Automobile Workers of America, whose president, R. J. Thomas, is supporting Mr. Roosevelt and conferred with him yesterday. A former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in the Roosevelt Administration, Miss Josephine Roche, was listed among nationally known individuals who had wired congratulations.

Wagner Replies Tonight

Union Attacks Lewis

Boston, Oct. 28 (AP).—Subregional directors of the Massachusetts branch of the Textile Workers of America, a C. I. O. affiliate, today reaffirmed support of President Roosevelt's candidacy and repudiated "John L. Lewis' indorsement of Wendell Willkie."

Joseph Salerno, State director of the union, said the action was unanimous, and that the subregional directors represented 50,000 workers in the Bay State. In a joint statement, Salerno and John Chupka, assistant State director, termed Lewis' indorsement of Willkie a "betrayal of the progressive traditions of the C. I. O."

To Back Roosevelt

Meadville, Pa., Oct. 27 (AP).—Paul Robinson, president of the Crawford-Venango County Industrial Council of the C. I. O., announced today the council, representing 5,000 workers, had wired John L. Lewis that it "unanimously voted to repudiate your position in indorsing Willkie. We will support Roosevelt."

Fortland, Oreg., Oct. 28 (AP).—Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, charged last night that John L. Lewis had been "sorely disappointed by President Roosevelt's refusal to appoint him to the Cabinet or to permit him to name the Secretary of Labor.

He told interviewers that the C. I. O. leader was moved by "personal motives" in indorsing Wendell Willkie, Republican Presidential candidate. Norris said he believed the rank and file of the C. I. O. would stand by Roosevelt.

Bridges Visits Lewis

By the Associated Press

Harry Bridges, California director for the C. I. O., came here by airplane yesterday and conferred with John L. Lewis, C. I. O. president, presumably on political matters.

Bridges told newspapermen that he would have no comment to make immediately, but would reserve anything he had to say until he returned to the West Coast.

To Back Roosevelt

Hazleton, Pa., Oct. 28 (AP).—Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America (C. I. O.) and former lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania, declared in a broadcast address tonight that he would work for the reelection of President Roosevelt.

He did not refer to John L. Lewis' indorsement of Wendell Willkie.

Willkie Stresses 'Two-Term Law'

America "to the same bad end that came to the squanderers our mothers pointed out to us in our youth."

To be made "strong" for national defense, he said America must first be made strong in its domestic policies.

Willkie is adding little new meat in this last Western swing. He is drumming away at the old homely arguments he thinks turned the trend in his favor.

At each stop he "preaches" unity—a verb he himself uses. And at each stand he tells voters to remember him only by his reiterated phrase: "Only the productive can be strong and only the strong can be free."

Even the songs blared from train loudspeakers as the "special" moves slowly through Midwest towns are keyed to old camp meeting tunes.

One entitled "The Good Old American Way," had a new line today:

"It isn't very sensible
"To think you're indispensable."

C. I. O. Leaders on Train

Contributing to the "lift" in Willkie's spirits, despite his struggle with an overworked throat, was a message brought aboard by C. I. O. leaders of the Illinois district of the United Mine Workers and Labor's Nonpartisan League.

Ray Edmundson, of Springfield, Ill., chairman of the State Labor league and president of the mine union district, told Willkie that 18 of the 21 top State officials of the union are 100 per cent behind C. I. O. Chairman John Lewis in his fight for Willkie.

Edmundson, and four other union leaders of the district, rode with Willkie across Illinois.

Hull's Speech Attacked

Willkie began the day with a statement to reporters in answer to Secretary of State Hull's Saturday night National Press Club speech. Willkie adroitly turned it into an argument against a third term.

Citing Hull's warning in June, 1935, that America must arm for defense, he charged the President did nothing about that warning but "send up verbal trial balloons" on popular sentiment, when he might have provided "effective leadership" for defense.

He refrained from any criticism of Hull himself, lending impetus to reports that he might, if elected, urge the Tennesseean to remain as his own Secretary of State.

Denies Cabinet Pledges

At Champaign, where the twin towns of Urbana and Champaign, plus the University of Illinois' student body, sent 15,000 to the station, he charged that if the President had adjourned Congress in June as he had wished, "we wouldn't even have a start on our defense program."

Here he promised to make Secretary of Agriculture "a man who knows farming and has not merely written about it." But he denied he has made pledges of "a position or a policy" to any man for any post.

In Danville, "Uncle Joe" Cannon's old district, he drove home his daily argument that "divide and rule" theories must be junked for his "unite and serve" doctrine, urging: "What's good for one is good for all." Representative Jessie Sumners furnished the pep effects, then had trouble quieting the crowd to hear Willkie's low voice.

'Mental Healer' To Serve Term Of 3 to 8 Months

Mrs. Rosalyn Randle, self-styled mental healer, who was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses here April 24, 1939, surrendered in District Court yesterday to begin her sentence of three to eight months in jail.

Mrs. Randle was convicted of taking $500 from a Washington woman to cure the woman's son, a brilliant student at the University of Pennsylvania, of a brain ailment which Mrs. Randle said he had. She lost appeals of her conviction in the United States Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court.

Since being convicted, Mrs. Randle has served three months in Massachusetts for practicing medicine without a license. She is under indictment here on a charge of using the mails to defraud. Assistant District Attorney Arthur B. Caldwell, who has prosecuted Mrs. Randle, said this trial would be set later.

Madame Chairman

MEMBERS of the Twentieth Century Club are gratified with reports of the work going on in the occupational therapy room they donated to the children's ward of Gallinger Hospital last December as their golden jubilee gift to civic welfare.

Mrs. R. Thomas West, chairman of the project, told the story of a little girl who had a muscular difficulty in one of her arms which required exercise using her thumb. Efforts to interest her in trying to do various simple kinds of handicraft employed in such cases were futile. Finally, while she was on the little terrace outside the room, where the children worked at their looms and other activities in warm weather, she asked for a flower. (Planting had been done by the garden section of the club, of which Mrs. Stephen Clap is chairman.)

She was told she could cut out one and was given scissors, which she accepted for the first time. Encouraged by the discovery she could use them, she cut flowers daily, and from then on took interest in doing other things which brought into use the muscles that needed exercising.

Another story came from the little library room the club furnished at the same time it equipped the one for occupational therapy. A girl who had spent most of her life in Glen Dale Hospital was transferred to Gallinger. Although she was old enough to read, she had taken little interest in it until she was given some of the books provided for the children at Gallinger. There, in the cheery little library, she learned how many friends there were inside of books and to how many lovely places they could take her.

Mrs. Philip Sydney Smith, a member of the committee for the project, recently visited the hospital and was told more and more children were being brought to the occupational therapy room and steadily growing cooperation was being received from the parents.

FOOD FROM HOME—Members of the Washington State and Alaska Society will eat Puget Sount salmon, spuds from Matnuska, Alaska, apples, prunes and pears from the West, at a dinner to be given soon by the society, plans for which will be made at a meeting Monday, November 4. The first get-together will be a dance that night at Hotel 2400.

PRESS CLUB LUNCHEON—Ruth Chatterton, star of stage and screen, and Dr. Paul J. Ewerhardt, widely known psychiatrist, will speak at the luncheon of the Women's National Press Club today at 1 p. m. at the Willard Hotel.

Miss Chatterton is appearing here as Eliza Dolittle in George Bernard Shaw's comedy, "Pygmalion," at the National Theater.

Dr. Ewerhardt will speak at the luncheon on "The World and You," with suggestions on how to combine a profession with home life.

NURSES TO MEET—The regular meeting of the public health section of the Graduate Nurses' Association will be held in the auditorium of the United States Public Health Building tonight at 8 o'clock. "The Public Health Nurse in Departmental Service" will be discussed by Robert M. Barrett, Federal Security Agency; Joseph L. F. Stillman, Civil Service Commission, and Mrs. Josephine Pitman Prescott, director, Nursing Bureau, D. C. Health Department.

BOARD MEETING—Meeting of the executive board of the Marietta Park Women's Club will be held tonight at the home of Mrs. I. L. Stormont, second vice president, 6200 Fifth Street Northwest.

talking motion pictures, the flash bulbs and the auditorium building, none of which existed in 1917, the setting will be the same.

In those war days, the first number was drawn by Secretary of War Newton D. Baker. He was blindfolded by Lieut. Col. Charles R. Morris, now retired, who will pin the same blindfold on Secretary Stimson today.

The first serial number to come out of the bowl then was 258. What today's first number will be can not be known until the little blue capsule is opened. Whatever it is, it will become Order No. 1 in the list of some 8,500 finally to be drawn.

All men who hold that number, wherever they are, will be required to fill out a questionnaire covering their qualifications and their eligibility for service. From among them will come the first of 800,000 men to be called in the next 12 months.

Other Notables to Draw

The second capsule will be drawn by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, the third by Attorney General Jackson, the fourth by Secretary of the Navy Knox, the fifth by Representative Thomason (Democrat), of Texas, and the sixth by Representative Kilday (Democrat), of Texas. The two Congressmen are members of the House Military Affairs Committee.

After the ceremonies are over, the capsules will be drawn from the bowl at the tested rate of 14 a minute, opened, posted and photographed. This, officials estimated yesterday, would require at least 11 hours. At the end of that time, every registrant will be in position to know where he stands on the schedule for meeting the Army's demands for men in the next five years.

The historic paraphernalia, the bowl, the paddle and the blindfold for the official drawing of the capsules, will leave selective service headquarters about 10 a. m. with a police escort. The capsules, safely locked in a vault at the Treasury, will be escorted to the Labor Department auditorium later.

The glass bowl, found too small to hold all the 8,500 capsules made especially for today's lottery, will be built up with transparent plastic. The blindfold was made of a bit of cloth from one of the chairs used at the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and the ladle was carved from a beam in Independence Hall at Philadelphia.

In the District, all numbers assigned to registrants by their local boards have been posted, said Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, local selective service executive, except those for District men who registered in other cities. These, he said, are still coming in and "may be coming in for another month," and will be assigned serial numbers in order as they arrive.

District No. 13 Is Split

To speed up the local organization's work and increase efficiency, District No. 13 was split in two yesterday when it was discovered it was carrying an unexpectedly heavy proportion of local registrants. The new district was numbered 25 and was given headquarters in the Henry School, Seventh and P Streets Northwest. Headquarters of the Thirteenth District has been transferred to Garnet-Patterson Junior High School.

New District 13 is the area bounded by Tenth Street, Vermont Avenue, S Street, Fourteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest. District 25 is bounded by Tenth Street, New York Avenue, Fifth Street, S Street, Seventh Street and Florida Avenue Northwest. New No. 13 has been given 3,959 of old No. 13's 8,557 registrants, the remaining 4,598 going to No. 25.

The District Commissioners named as members of Board No. 25, Bertram Wise, 1316 Seventh Street; Gilbert Leake, 1317 Seventh Street; William J. Holtman, jr., 609 New York Avenue; John M. Demarco, Seventh and N Streets, and Dr. H. C. Edwards, 733 M Street. Woodruff Youngs, of the Hamilton Hotel, was named to replace Dr. Edwards, transferred from Board No. 13.

Mailing to Begin Wednesday

Until old District No. 13 was split, it contained the largest number of registrants in any district in the United States. A Baltimore district now leads, with 7,836 names, which is the number of actual serial numbers in the capsules. The balance are blanks to take care of late registrants.

Local headquarters, Gen. Cox said, probably will begin mailing questionnaires Wednesday to holders of the first numbers drawn. Forms were distributed to the local boards yesterday.

Serial numbers held by registrants will have no effect whatever on the order in which they come from the bowl, a review of the 1917 draft shows. Then, serial No. 1 did not appear until 4,268 others had been drawn and serial No. 1 was No. 10,312 out of the bowl. The first drawing, of 10,500 numbers, required 16 hours and 29 minutes.

Man's Death Laid To Skull Fracture

Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald, District coroner, announced last night an autopsy on the body of James Mitchell, 32, of 3945 Connecticut Avenue, showed he died of a fractured skull.

Mitchell was found unconscious at the home of a friend in Arlington County, Va., early Sunday morning. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Emergency Hospital. Police said they were told the man fell down a flight of stairs.

D. C. Czech Colony Visions End Of Nazi Yoke on '4th of July'

Members of Washington's Czech colony celebrated their German-liquidated republic's Independence Day last night in anticipation of "another 28th of October"—a date which corresponds to the American Fourth of July.

Vladimir Hurban, Czech Minister to the United States, voiced their determination to help cast off the German yoke by telling some 100 of the celebrants, meeting at Mays Restaurant, 2317 Calvert Street Northwest, that:

"Today is not a day for celebration, but one to make plans for another 28th of October."

Edward Wolesensky, president of the American Czech National Alliance, sponsor of the local twenty-second anniversary observance, told of plans for armed resistance already under way in their Nazi-dominated homeland.

Byron Plans Four Speeches in Week

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 28 (AP).—A schedule of four speeches by Representative William D. Byron (Democrat, Sixth), seeking reelection, was announced by Democratic headquarters today for the final week before election.

Both parties threw their campaigns into high gear in Allegany County. Walter Johnson, Germantown, is opposing Byron.

Democratic headquarters said Byron would speak tomorrow at a meeting in Firemen's Hall, Mount Savage; spend Wednesday in Cumberland, and speak at a Frostburg rally Friday night.

Draft to Call 1 of 6 Eligibles, Experts Reveal

Chances Are One In a 'Gloomph' No. 1 Will Be First

By Edward Ryan

If anyone took the trouble to sit down and multiply all the numbers from 1 to 8,500 the answer would be terrific.

The answer would be some gigantic number that an astronomer, and no one else, might know about. The number would have no name, unless you wanted to call it something like a "gloomph."

A gloomph then would be a number like a million, only bigger, too big, in fact, to use any time but today. But for today, at least, a gloomph has a certain remote significance. For example, there is exactly one chance in a gloomph that the numbers drawn in the draft lottery will come out in 1-2-3 order all the way to 8,500.

Another Chance in a Gloomph

There is also one chance in a gloomph that the numbers drawn today will repeat exactly the order of numbers drawn for the World War draft.

This chance, although it has a theoretical existence in the mathematics of probability, is microscopic or less, and scarcely worth a second thought.

There is a much larger chance that any one number in the list will be drawn first. If you have number 228, there is one chance in 8,599 it will be drawn first, an equal chance that it will be drawn last.

Government mathematicians who cited these facts yesterday admitted that while their mathematics would deal handily with the theoretical problems of the lattery, it wouldn't help much in predicting how soon any eligible male citizen would be in the Army.

One Chance in Six to Go

Against the theoretical chances of the lottery, the practical chances of the draft, according to officials at Selective Service Headquarters, there is roughly one chance in six that an able-bodied man in the 21 to 35 age group, without dependants or an essential job, will be called for active service by the end of next June.

Their present estimates, Selective Service officials said, show that of the 17,000,000 registrants, about 5,000,000 will be classed as available for service. Of these, 600,000 are expected to be called the first year. Today these chances give any eligible individual 4 chances out of 25 of being called, or roughly, 1 out of 6.

Mathematicians and draft officials alike explained that the chance for an individual to be called varies from district to district. In one draft board area, it was suggested, all or most of the registrants might be employed in essential jobs. The quota of that draft area would then have to be made up through the State, and the chances of individuals in other areas to be called would be raised.

5,000,000 Available

Base numbers in the draft quota planning are the figures 5,000,000 and 1,900,000. The first is the Nation's estimated available men, the second is the expected enrollment in the Nation's armed forces by next June. If a given State has 1 per cent of the Nation's manpower, it would have to furnish by June 1 per cent of the men in the armed forces. This total would be the State's gross quota. Against that, the State could write off the number of men it already has in the armed forces, and the remainder would be the number to be called in the first year. Continuing this figure would give quotas for the separate draft areas.

After today, through the lottery, the chance of the individual being called will depend partly on the position of his number on the master list, partly on the status of the other individuals on his local Draft Board list, to be determined by the draft questionnaires. By then, the men to consult will not be the mathematicians but the Draft Board.

Arthur W. Cline, 55, covered the first World War draft lottery with a newsreel camera, and yesterday he was setting the stage for the new lottery. Clime is one of the Government's building superintendents and he is in charge of the Departmental Auditorium where the numbers will be drawn. It was his job to arrange the indoor tower for photographers, supervise building an addition to the stage and arranging impromptu press facilities.

He got into the first draft ceremony by helping his brother, W. S. Clime, Pathe movie photographer, now a landscape architect. Today, he said, he won't take any pictures, just watch.

Support Draft, Hershey Pleads

Active public opinion is "the only policeman" that will make the Selective Service Act work, Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, chief executive officer of selective service, told the Prince Georges (Md.) Chamber of Commerce last night.

It is up to the public to convince the selectee that he has been chosen fairly and that he is performing a signal service for his country, he said in an address before more than 100 business men at the Beaver Dam Country Club.

Short talks also were made by Leo W. Dunn, and Brice Clagett, chairmen of two Prince Georges selective service boards.

U. S., Canada Begin 'Intensive Cooperation'

Joint Defense Action Is Response to Popular Will, Says Moffatt

Toronto, Oct. 28 (AP).—The United States and Canada are entering a period of intensive cooperation as the result of the formation of a joint defense board, United States Minister J. Pierrepont Moffatt said today.

MOFFATT

Addressing the Canadian Club, he described the board as "a Governmental response to two popular wills" and a recognition that closer Canadian-United States relations implied a widening of ties between Canada and Britain has passed, he declared.

Wenner-Gren Provides Funds for Laboratory

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 28 (AP).—Gift of $70,000 for equipment of an aeronautical motors laboratory now under construction at the University of Kentucky has been made by Axel Wenner-Gren, Swedish industrialist, through the Viking Foundation, Col. James H. Graham, dean of the University Engineering College, announced today.

Wenner-Gren on July 2 gave $800,000 for construction of the laboratory which will be used to test all types of internal combustion and aviation motors.

Secret Diplomacy Charged to Roosevelt

Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, charged in the Senate yesterday that there was "more secret diplomacy emanating from the White House today than ever before in history."

Holt quoted President Roosevelt as having said "your Government has no information which it has any thought of withholding from you."

In contrast to this, the Senator contended, an "official censorship" has been clamped on information about the export of fighting planes.

'Indispensable' Man Must Serve Term

New York, Oct. 28 (INS).—Despite the fact that he presented a letter from Assistant Secretary of War Patterson certifying that his firm is filling defense needs, Joseph J. Mascuch, president of the Breeze Corporation, of Newark, N. J., today lost his fight to evade serving a two-year prison term for perjury.

"The efforts of the United States in rearming do not depend on a convicted felon and your argument that you are indispensable is preposterous on its face," said Federal Judge Clancy, pointing out that Patterson had pointedly refused to say that Mascuch's services were essential

Bethlehem Official Sees Hillman

New York, Oct. 28.—The Bethlehem Steel Corporation issued a statement today acknowledging that one of its officials had been conferring with Sidney Hillman, a member of the National Defense Advisory Commission, concerning the company's labor relations in the National defense program.

It was learned from other sources, however, that the corporation has recently gone further in recognition of the C. I. O. Union than it had ever done before. Notices were recently distributed to about 2,500 employes of three Bethlehem ship repair yards recognizing Local 13, Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Works of America, C. I. O., as collective bargaining agent.

Streetcars Crush Three Automobiles

Two streetcars yesterday played their own version of the "Nutcracker Suite," crushing three automobiles in a strange rendition of the ballet.

The first streetcar, operated by Stephen Royal, 57, of 647 Park Road Northwest, came to a stop at Twelfth and H Streets Northwest. The autos immediately behind also came to a stop, but a second streetcar, operated by W. H. Butler, 47, of 2620 Sixth Street Northeast, failed to do likewise, and rammed into the third auto. The three autos were badly damaged, but their occupants escaped unhurt.

The autoists were listed by police as Eugene Graves, 135 T Street Northwest; Paul Lanigan, 639 Fourteenth Street Northeast, and Jesse Young, 48, Fifty-third Street Southeast.

DeMarco, Bank Manager, Heads Board for Area 25

New Unit to Lighten Load of No. 13; Other Members Are Dr. H. C. Edwards, Bertram Wise, W. J. Holtman, Jr., G. R. Leake

John M. DeMarco, 37, manager of the Seventh Street Branch of the Hamilton National Bank, yesterday was elected chairman of the new draft board No. 25, created yesterday to lighten the registration load previously carried by board No. 13.

DeMarco was chosen at the new board's first meeting. His associates are Dr. H. Cicero Edwards, 44, of 633 M Street Northwest, who was elected secretary. (He had previously served Board 13 as secretary.); Bertram Wise, 49, of 1316 Seventh Street Northwest; William J. Holtman, jr., 52, of 609 New York Avenue Northwest, and Gilbert R. Leake, 39, of 607 Gallatin Street Northwest. Woodruff Youngs, 37, of 923 Delafield Place Northwest, was appointed to membership on Board 13 to replace Dr. Edwards.

DeMarco started as a runner with the Seventh Street institution in 1919. Made an assistant cashier in 1927 and cashier in 1930, he was named to his present position in 1933.

The new chairman has not confined his activities to banking, however. He is a member of the District Bar Association, the Reciprocity Club, Sigma Delta Kappa fraternity, the Lido Civic Club, the Knights of Columbus and the North Seventh Street Business Men's Association.

Columbus University Graduate

He is a graduate of Emerson Institute, the American Institute of Banking, and Columbus University Law School. His home is at 4218 Tenth Street Northwest.

Dr. Edwards, a dentist, came to Washington in 1917 to study at Howard University, leaving school to enlist in the Army. He went overseas with the infantry, serving in the battles of Vosges Mountains and the Argonne Forest. Returning to this country in 1919 he reentered Howard and was graduated from the medical school in 1924.

He is secretary of the Robert T. Freeman Dental Society, assistant secretary of the National Dental Association, and a member of Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity.

Wise, a bachelor, makes his home at the Wardman Park Hotel. He is manager of Harry Kaufman, Inc. He came to Washington from Philadelphia at the age of 21, and has been with the Kaufman firm for 28 years. He is a former president of the North Seventh Street Businessmen's Association and a Shriner. An ardent sailor, he'll usually be found aboard his 40-foot cruiser when not at work.

Coal Company Owner

Holtman is the owner and manager of the W. H. H. Allen Coal Co. at 609 New York Avenue Northwest. A native Washingtonian, he has been in business here for nearly 30 years except for 10 years when he was in the brokerage business in Baltimore. He is a graduate of Custer Military Academy, a member of Lebanon Lodge of the Masons and interested in the Boy Scout movement. He says baseball is his hobby.

Leake is president of the Packwood Printing Co. and president of the North Seventh Street Businessmen's Association. He has been in business in Washington for the last ten years. In addition to his other activities, Leake is treasurer of the Graphic Arts Association and a member of the Reciprocity Club.

Youngs is superintendent of services at the Hamilton Hotel. He is a rare being, a third generation native Washingtonian. He was educated at Central High School, Washington College of Law, and is a member of the District Bar.

Politics Charged In Defense Jobs

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Oct. 28.—John W. Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury in the Roosevelt Administration and now executive member of the National Committee of Democrats for Willkie, charged today that the Democratic National Committee was deliberately bartering defense production contracts for campaign contributions.

Hanes cited a news story published last Friday in the Arkansas Gazette, of Little Rock. The story described a meeting at which Arkansas Democratic leaders called on business men to contribute liberally to the Democratic campaign fund if they expected the State to receive national defense industries. The political leaders warned, the story said, that the State could best gain a favorable position by oversubscription of the State's Democratic campaign fund quota.

FBI Asked to Curb Egg Throwers

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—The Associated Willkie Clubs of America appealed tonight to the Federal Bureau of Investigation to "prohibit heckling and the throwing of eggs, vegetables and other missiles at pro-Willkie speakers in the deep South."

John Underhill, publicity director of the clubs, said Miss Mabel Jones West, of Birmingham, Ala., had complained, as chairman of the Democratic Women's Willkie Clubs of Alabama, that "public speakers on behalf of Willkie in Alabama are being subjected to violence and intimidation by an organized opposition."

At Montgomery, Ala., Gov. Frank Dixon commented that "boos, jeers and pounding of auto horns . . . have been part and parcel of political campaigns for many years."

Oren Root Charges New Deal Employs U. S. Cash for Votes

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Oren Root, jr., chairman of the Associated Willkie Clubs of America, charged tonight that the Administration had "never hesitated to use the people's money in an effort to buy votes to keep itself in power" and would "not hesitate to do so next week."

Before departing to join the Willkie campaign train, Root said in an address for delivery over N. B. C. that national polls indicated a close election. He urged Willkie clubs to redouble their efforts, and added:

"We are up against the most cynical and ruthless bunch of politicians who have ever sat in Washington."

Root said the election would "probably be won or lost in the next seven days" and the side which converted the most of the now undecided voters would win.

charges by Harry F. Guggenheim, copper magnate who heads the Aviation Division of the Republican National Committee, who said last week that Morgenthau was "deliberately misleading and false," when he said recently that production of warplanes for United States defense and British requirements had been speeded up.

Morgenthau produced in support of his statements special letters from Maj. Gen. George H. Brett, acting chief of the Army Air Corps, and Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of Naval Aeronautics.

Terming Guggenheim's statements "shameful," Secretary Morgenthau praised "the large majority of plane manufacturers" for their cooperation with the defense program.

Terming Guggenheim's charges "pretty wicked in these times," Morgenthau read the following statement from Gen. Brett:

"The 25 combat groups scheduled in the 5,500-plane program, which was authorized by the Congress early in 1939 and expected for completion by July 1, 1941, will now be substantially organized and equipped by April 1, 1941, or three months in advance of the originally scheduled date."

The Treasury Secretary read also the following statement from Admiral Towers:

"In response to your inquiry as to whether or not the Navy 3,000-plane program will be completed on schedule, I can say definitely that it will be completed well ahead of schedule.

"The 3,000-plane program was a part of the Naval Expansion Act aproved May 17, 1938. It provided for the planes to be carried on the ships of the expanded Navy, and in addition certain seaplanes to be operated from shore bases to be constructed later. It also included planes for marine aviation. The schedule of procurement was drawn up to fit the anticipated completion dates of ships and shore bases, and although these ships and shore bases are being accelerated there is no question but what the planes will be on hand well ahead of them."

Visibly disturbed by the Guggenheim charges, Morgenthau furnished reporters with photostatic copies of remarks about plane procurement that he made at a press conference October 24. The transcript showed that the Cabinet member had made no comment on the speed of delivery of planes for United States defense, confining his remarks to production of planes on British orders.

Associated with various departments of the conference for more than 30 years, Haynes has been acting publicity director since the death of Walter L. Burgan last summer.

The author of a dozen books, Haynes is former president of the South American division, the Greater New York division and recently headed the Michigan Conference, where he edited various publications of the faith.

He is expected to arrive from Lansing, Mich., within 10 days to take up his duties at the general conference.

The committee, according to Ernest D. Dick, general secretary, voted a special appropriation of $2,500 for war relief work in the British Isles yesterday. The funds will be used for Adventists affected by war conditions.

Planes and Divers, Sailors and Marines Thrill D. C. Crowd

With a rakish destroyer on a slow, green river for its backdrop, the Navy put on a seven-ring, fast-firing show here yesterday lasting nearly nine hours and keeping an estimated 100,000 persons alternately looking up—where planes zoomed—or down where divers disappeared underwater.

The show, the Washington Navy Yard's part in the Navy Day observances, began at 8:30 a. m. in Fairlawn Park, across the Anacostia River from the yard, and lasted until 5:15 p. m., with such nearby facilities and personnel as could be made available participating.

It suggested a circus, without a tent's restrictions. Activities, strung out across the wide park and on the river, kept the crowd hopping. Something went on continuously, on ground, water or overhead.

Planes Vs. Warships

Here, at alternate moments, is what the crowd saw:

Planes flown by Navy and Marine Corps pilots moved in formation above the destroyer Morris, anchored in the river, giving the public some idea of the targets presented in airplane-battleship fighting.

A towed barge moved from back of the Morris, swung into midstream and a white seaplane was catapulted off like a swan from a rock.

Divers climbed down the side of the diving boat Crilley, lumbered slowly into the river and blew up bubbles. Boys, somehow out of school and lining the shore, pointed their fingers speculating where the divers would come up.

Gas Masks Tried On

Lieut. Comdr. J. P. Wetherill, U. S. N., standing on a Navy truck, drew a big crowd to his lecture on chemical warfare defense and spectators at his invitation tried on gas masks. An announcement had said: "This lecture and demonstration of the adjustment of the gas mask will possibly be of great value to you, Mr. Citizen."

The marines, in a squared-off area, demonstrated their infantry weapons. The demonstrators came from the rifle range at the Quantico base and were commanded by Capt. George Van Orden, U. S. M. C.

Sailors from the receiving ship, Navy Yard, performed an exercise drill with rifles to a band accompaniment.

Parade Held

Three pursuit ships flew in close formation at high speed. Twelve planes, in formation, stayed in the air for more than an hour.

A parade and review went on at 4 p. m. for the Navy Yard commandant, Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill, who was escorted by Capt. H. B. Riebe and Commander W. R. Terrell. In the parade was a battalion of marines from the barracks at Eighth and I Streets, under command of Maj. Howard E. Rosecrans, U. S. M. C.

Other honor guests were Mrs. Frances McFadden, president of the United Women's Democratic Clubs of Maryland; Miss Bertha Joseph, secretary to Senator Radcliffe (Democrat), of Maryland.

The program, without speeches, included solos by David Manley, tenor, accompanied by Margaret Penn White.

The Bethesda-Chevy Chase Lions Club yesterday announced a gala Halloween celebration for Bethesda.

Special police protection has been arranged and the Bethesda Fire Department will assist in handling traffic. Following the races there will be a costume contest at the Bethesda shopping center.

Wilton T. Allen, past president of the club, will be master of ceremonies. T. Ormonde Nichols is general chairman of the committee in charge.

Propaganda Inquiry Opened By Grand Jury

FBI Agent Testifies In Case Growing Out Of News Service Probe

An investigation of alleged crimes by foreign propagandists, which may last for months, was opened by Government counsel before the District grand jury yesterday.

Assistant District Attorney John W. Fihelly and Assistant Attorney General Whiting Willauer spent more than an hour before the grand jury.

Only one witness, a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, testified in the first day's session. Other evidence will be offered on Wednesday and Friday this week.

Attorney General Jackson ordered the inquiry last week, giving Willauer Nation-wide authority. Mentioned as under investigation and suspected of failure to register as alien propaganda agents were Transocean News Service and Manfred Zapp, its general manager.

The Dies Committee recently seized the files of the news service. They were turned over to Willauer by the Attorney General.

Supreme Court Denies Plea Of Mail House

Montgomery Ward & Co. Loses in Wage-Hour Record Subpena Issue

By the Associated Press

The Supreme Court refused yesterday to interfere with a circuit court decision holding that the Federal wage-hour administrator could subpena records from employers.

The court turned down a request by Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., to review a ruling that records could be required even though there was no reasonable cause to believe that the Wage-Hour Act was being violated.

Denial of a review left in effect the decision by the Seventh Federal Circuit Court.

The Supreme Court's action was interpreted by the Federal wage-hour administrator, Col. Philip B. Fleming, as requiring all employers to produce pay roll records upon the demand of the Federal agency. Col. Fleming asserted in a statement that there could now be "no excuse for any employer's refusing access" to such data.

Before adjourning for two weeks, the Supreme Court also denied a petition by the Norfolk (Va.) School Board for a review of a circuit court decision holding that colored public school teachers were entitled to the same compensation as white teachers equally qualified.

Lost First Fight

The Chicago mail order house challenged the authority of the administrator to subpena records concerning 2,000 employes at its Kansas City (Mo.) branch.

Its contention that such action constituted an unreasonable "search and seizure" prohibited by the constitution was overruled by the Seventh Federal Circuit Court.

Solicitor General Francis Biddle said Montgomery Ward had argued that each employer could determine in advance what employes were subject to the act and could limit to them the information given the Federal Administration.

Could Hinder Act

This, Biddle asserted, "would halt the administrator's investigation at the threshold and seriously impair the enforcement of the act."

He added that Montgomery Ward, by objecting to the administrator's action, had delayed for 18 months a preliminary investigation to determine whether the corporation had complied with the act.

Other litigation testing the constitutionality of the statute is pending before the Supreme Court. The act fixes minimum pay and a maximum work week for employes.

Slayer Gets Review

Robert S. James, Los Angeles barber sentenced to death for the 1935 slaying of his wife, was granted a Supreme Court review on his contention that his trial was a "mock and a sham" because "two, live, hissing rattlesnakes" had been exposed to the jury.

This, his petition asserted, "created such a state of fright in their minds as to bring in a death penalty verdict through passion and prejudice."

The prosecution had alleged that James and a codefendant first failed in an effort to kill Mrs. James by means of a poisonous rattlesnake bite on her foot.

Then, it was alleged, they drowned her in the bathtub of her home and placed the body in a fish pond. It was several months before her slaying was discovered.

Army's 'Polar Bear' Squadron Gets Arctic Test This Winter

A "POLAR BEAR"—Maj. Dale Gaffney, commander of the Army's new Ladd Field, Fairbanks, Alaska, is shown beside his flagship, a four-motored bomber bearing the insignia of squadron, known as the "Polar Bears." The polar bear, standing on an iceberg, against a background of northern lights, has a bomb in its paw

Warplanes and men at the Army's new cold weather experimental station in the Arctic Circle will receive a real test of the rigors of an Alaskan winter this year, the commander of the Nation's northernmost military base declared yesterday.

Maj. Dale Gaffney, commander of Ladd Field, near Fairbanks, Alaska, disclosed that hangars will not be available at the base before next year and that consequently the planes of his "Polar Bear" Squadron will stand in the open during 60-below-zero weather this winter.

Gaffney, a veteran of nearly 24 years in aviation and more than 8,000 flying hours, flew here Saturday in his four-engined bomber flagship to report to Air Corps chiefs on the establishment of the new station and confer on plans for this winter's experimental work.

Flights already have been made as far north as Point Barrow, Maj. Gaffney declared, in discussing a program for test flights over the upper regions of Alaska throughout the winter. Despite the fact that the temperature goes below zero 116 days out the year, and there are only a few hours of daylight during December and January, "full working days" are planned all year, he declared.

Skis will be used on the planes much of the time, it was said, though the normal snowfall around Fairbanks is only about 48 inches and packs down to about 2 feet. Dog sleds will be provided for the field, but Maj. Gaffney declared his pilots and mechanics would fly and leave the "huskies" for the post's Infantry guard.

Fourteen officers and 200 men now make up the garrison of the field and handle its five planes, although when completed there will be about 30 officers and 300 men, and planes of all types. Temporary barracks are now available, while quarters for married officers and noncoms will be finished December 1, Maj. Gaffney said.

Two of the base's five planes are big B-17 bombers and were flown nonstop to Ladd Field from McChord Field, Wash., earlier this month. Capt. Richard Freeman made the trip in eight hours, the first nonstop flight from the United States to Fairbanks, Army officials said.

During the winter, exhaustive experiments will be made with the two bombers, two pursuit ships and an observation plane, plus others expected. Not only the effect of subzero weather on carburetors, motors and wing surfaces will be studied, but also the reaction of pilots under these conditions.

Maj. Gaffney, who has spent the past year in Alaska, making preparations for the experimental station and conducting preliminary studies, insisted there was nothing adventurous or particularly of interest about the job of the "Polar-Bear" Squadron.

It's just plain hard work," he said. "There is nothing romantic about 40 below zero."

He is accused of taking $20,000,000 from stockholders of the company. He is to be tried on eighteen counts of mail fraud and one alleging conspiracy.

Deputy Marshal Faces Probe After Shooting of D. C. Couple

James A. Quinn, Automatically Suspended, Is Released to Custody of Chief; Bullet Pierced Man's Body, Wounded Woman

Automatically suspended after a man and a woman were wounded by a bullet fired from his revolver, James A. Quinn, 33, a deputy United States marshal, last night was released in custody of Chief United States Marshal Michael J. Kearney pending an investigation.

The shooting victims identified by police as Kermit Hawthorn Sherman, alias Russell Tarvin, alias Russell Murphy, 32, of 1331 Belmont Street Northwest, and Mrs. Mary Lewis, telephone operator about 45, of 915 Twentieth Street Northwest, were recovering at Emergency Hospital.

The shooting occurred, according to police, near a restaurant at 1621 H Street Northwest early yesterday.

Passing through Sherman's abdomen, the same bullet wounded Mrs. Lewis, described as a bystander listening to an argument between the deputy and Sherman. She received minor flesh wounds above the right thigh.

Placed under arrest after first taking the victims to the hospital, Quinn told police of the Third Precinct that Sherman had pulled a knife on him. He also said he had gone to the restaurant to look for another man.

United States Marshal John P. Colpoys and Deputy Marshal Kearney with the cooperation of police are investigating several conflicting accounts of the shooting as reported by witnesses.

After the investigation, Colpoys said, Quinn would be restored to duty if it appeared that he was not at fault. Colpoys expected a decision today or tomorrow.

French Speed Defense in Orient

Phom-Penh, Cambodia, French Indo-China, Oct. 28 (AP).—The French are speeding defense preparations near the Thailand (Siamese) frontier on reports of apprehension in Cambodia and Laos—border protectorates—that the Thai government might yield to popular clamor for action to enforce its twice-rejected demands for territory in Indo-China.

Authoritative quarters here repeated the Vichy government's earlier declaration that French Indo-China would resist any Thai attempt to violate the borders established in a series of treaties signed between 1867 and 1907.

French defenders are forbidden to act, however, unless Thailand takes a belligerent step.

Lewis Moved by Hate, Senator Norris Charges

Redding, Calif., Oct. 28 (INS).—Charging that John L. Lewis' motives in indorsing Wendell Willkie for President were "selfishness, ill will, and hate," Senator George W. Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, today predicted President Roosevelt will be reelected.

Norris stopped here to inspect Shasta Dam en route to Los Angeles.

"Lewis is moved by ill will, hate, and selfishness that is hardly comprehensible. I doubt his sincerity especially in the things he said about Willkie," Norris told reporters.

Don't brush your false teeth or dental plates—you can't purify them that way—you can't even clean them properly that way.

Keep up with the times—get today a generous 30 cent bottle of Stera-Kleen—give your plate a bath as directed, and after the first bath your false teeth will start to sparkle with purity and cleanliness—will so glisten with beauty that you'll be proud of them. Your mouth will feel much better—rejuvenated.

Just a pinch of Stera-Kleen in a half glass of water and all slimy mucin stains and murkiness begin to go—it's amazing—lasts for weeks—30 cents—all drug stores.

Halloween Fest Plans Complete

Six Bands to Liven North Washington Parade and Party Thursday Night

At least six bands will strike up the tunes in the holiday parade and party of the North Washington Halloween Committee Thursday night, it was announced last night as final arrangements were completed for the celebration.

The parade will start at 8 p. m. at Georgia Avenue at Quincy Street and will move up the avenue to Buchanan Street, west on Buchanan Street to Iowa Avenue, then south on Iowa Avenue to the front of Macfarland Junior High School, 4,400 Iowa Avenue, where the reviewing stand will be located.

Three hundred children from four playgrounds, as well as others from youth organizations, will join the line of march with numerous floats. The parade will be led by the grand marshal, D. E. Nichols, president of Park View Citizens Association; and the "Queen of Halloween," 17-year-old Nancy Shenk, with her court of 12 attendants.

Following the parade, there'll be a dance and party at the Roosevelt High School Armory, Thirteenth and Upshur Streets Northwest, with prizes for the outstanding costumes.

Mid-City Citizens

For the twenty-fourth consecutive year A. J. Driscoll last night was unanimously elected president of the Mid-City Citizens Association at a meeting held at the Thomson School, Twelfth and L Streets Northwest.

DRISCOLL

Miss Edith L. Grosvenor was reelected vice president. Reelected recording secretary was M. E. Salsbury; treasurer, Max T. Pimes. John L. C. Pines was elected financial secretary. Reelected as delegates to the federation from the group were Frank B. Hoffman and George A. Warren.

The association requested that a blood test for venereal disease be made a prerequisite to obtaining a marriage license here.

It was recommended that the District be not taxed for costs of constructing the new Washington airport, which was termed "far beyond the scale of needs of the city." A resolution also was adopted requesting that the District Testing Plant be reopened to supplant road-testing work now being conducted by the Bureau of Standards.

Society of Natives

A resolution urging Congressional action which would restore operation of the District testing laboratory was adopted last night by the Society of Natives.

The resolution asked for repeal of the rider on the District appropriation bill providing that none of the funds could be used to operate the laboratory. The resolution followed reading of a letter by the society's president, J. M. Howard, from Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the District of Columbia Motor Club of the American Automobile Association, urging such action.

The society, opening its twenty-first year at the meeting at the Arts Club, elected three new members, Frederick Levy, Mrs. Helena D. Reed and Charles Bradshaw. William E. Richardson and Louis Bowdler were named as representatives to the Federation.

Northwest Council

The Northwest Citizens Council last night declared war against billboards which mar the city's views and scenery.

Meeting at the home of Dr. George C. Havenner, 2915 Albemarle Street Northwest, the organization voted to ask the District Commissioners to take up the matter with the Fine Arts Commission "with a view to eliminating" the billboards to blame.

The council, composed of representatives of six citizens' associations northwest of Rock Creek, also resolved to seek restoration of the Police Department's "vacant house car," which formerly patrolled Chevy Chase, D. C., area to watch over houses unoccupied during the summer. Housebreakings in the area increased by 24 last August, when the car was discontinued, it was said.

North Capitol

Election of George F. Hardie as president and the adoption of a resolution favoring reopening of the District Testing Laboratory featured last night's meeting of North Capitol Citizens Association.

Hardie, who has been a member of the executive committee and chairman of the public utilities committee, was named to succeed E. B. Lawless. The latter, who declined to be renominated on account of ill health, was elected first vice president.

Mrs. Ada C. Payne was elected vice president; James A. Crooks, reelected secretary-treasurer; C. J. MacMurray, reelected financial secretary. Crooks and Baxter Smith were named delegates to the Federation of Citizens Association.

Georgetown Citizens

A resolution authorizing its traffic committee to confer with Georgetown merchants on the problem of parking restrictions on M Street was adopted by Georgetown Citizens Association last night.

In the discussion, it was pointed out that some sentiment has arisen in opposition to restrictions now in effect on that street, where cars may be parked on only one side in the morning and on the other side in the afternoon. The association did not take action on the question last night, but its traffic committee, headed by J. B. Wyckoff, will look further into the problem.

Committee reports and the election of a new member, Walter F. Bramhall, completed the business meeting.

Glen Echo Elects Boy Mayor, Juvenile Council To Govern Town Through Halloween Night

THEY'LL SEE TO IT THAT "GOBBLINS" DON'T PROWL—To assure a sane and orderly Halloween in Glen Echo, Md., Thursday, these youngsters have been named to official positions in the town council. Top (left to right)—Peggy Wood, 16, councilman; Clayton Smalling, 16, councilman; John Jones, mayor; J. Fagan, 17, councilman; Harold Shannon, 17, marshall, and Bonita Bradshaw, 17, councilman. Lower—Robert Hoganmiller, elected fire chief, gets the feel of an engine's wheel

Johnnie Jones, a 17-year-old high school pupil, last night was elected for a three-day term as "mayor of Glen Echo, Md., at a spirited election held by 100 juveniles in the town firehouse.

For the next three days—through Halloween night—Jones and his elected staff will run the town, maintain the law, and keep the peace. Vandals, practical jokers, noise makers, and trouble starters face the full penalty of the law—as administered by the junior town government.

It's no monkey business, either, according to Mrs. Beulah McCuen, town mayor for the other 362 days of this year. Two years ago mischievous Halloween pranks cost the town $200. Last year, with imitation of the junior town government, nary a fire alarm was pulled. The boy (and girl) officials saw to that.

Elected to serve with young Jones were four members of the council, Bonita Bradshaw, 15, Peggy Wood, 15; Clayton Smalling, 17, and Jane Fagan, 16; town secretary-treasurer, Jack Bradshaw, 16; fire chief, John Hoganmiller, 11, youngest of the officials; president of the fire board, Mickey Harris, 17; president of the ladies fire auxiliary, Betty Ballenger, 12; and town marshal, Harold Shannon, 17.

The young folks, ranging from 9 to 17, had evidently done some vote-getting, for nominations and balloting were carried out by well-organized blocs. Fourteen-year-old John Debo assumed the task of calling for an end to nominations for each individual office.

Thursday night the youthful town officials, together with their "constituency" will be given a Halloween party at the firehouse, with awards for the best costumes and amateur entertainment, topped off by cider and doughnuts.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents Charles L. Wagner's production of Rossini's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" in Constitution Hall Monday night. The cast:

Figaro ..... Carlos Ramirez
Almaviva .... Armand Tokatyan
Rosina ..... Hilde Reggiani
Basilio ..... John Gurney
Bartolo .... Pompilio Malatesta
Fiorello ..... Brooks Dunbar
Betra ..... Georgia Graves
Conductor: Giuseppe Bamboschek.

Constitution Hall held a large audience last evening, when Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey began her managerial activities of the season by presenting Charles L. Wagner's touring production of Rossini's "The Barber of Seville." The mise-en-scene was the neatest and most practically theatrical that has ever been staged in the National Capital' sorry substitute for an opera house, and the performance was primarily distinguished by the captivating debut here of the young Argentinian baritone, Carlos Ramirez, from the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires, and by the admirable singing of the American basso, John Gurney. At the conductor's desk, Giuseppe Bamboschek imparted a lively pace to the time-defying as well as time-worn opera which will be 124 years old next February.

Ray C. B. Brown

Senor Ramirez was a personable and ebullient personification of the wily and cynical Figaro. By the sheer force of his vitality and the spontaneous current of his temperament, he made the character dominate, as it should, everybody and everything in the opera. In his impersonation and histrionic aptness he continually underlined the gallantry, wit and irony which constitute the essence of Beaumarchais' comedy and the animating principles of Rossini's effervescent music. His barytone voice had the resonance and the flexibility requisite for the role, and he used it with skill and discretion.

John Gurney, with the amplitude and sonority of his basso tones, actually dignified the buffo role of Don Basilio, a feat which only a few artists such as Feodor Chaliapin have been able to perform. This was accomplished not only by his singing but also by his perceptive projection of the sinister spiritual quality of the character, which is an embodiment of greed and sunning. He never allowed the indispensable clowning of the part to descend to mere buffonery, but kept it on the plane of malice. His reading of the exacting area, "La calunnia e un venticello" had both dramatic and comedic power.

Hilda Reggiani was a technically proficient Rosina who displayed a carefully calculated phrasing that cooled "Una voce poco fa" into more of a vocalise than a romantic reverie. Her voice in this first aria was a little hard and inclined to sharpness of intonation. Later, when her voice had warmed and lost its nervous tenseness, it revealed some enjoyable delicacies in reading and a tender quality appealing to the ear. Her command of fioriture seemed an acquisition imposed upon a natural lyricism which would show to better advantage in a less florid role.

Armand Tokatyan was a thoroughly routined Almaviva and sang with a gusto that made the most of a tenor voice which has passed its apogee. Pompilio Malatesta as Bartolo showed a veteran's experience, and exercised the usual precaution of singing Romani's "Manca un foglio" in place of Rossini's "A un dottor della mia sorte," which has in these days vanished from the score. Georgia Graves as Berta, Brooks as Fiorello and Earl Wrightson as an officer completed the cast.

Some day one would like to hear another setting of "The Barber of Seville." Paisielle composed one in 1780 which was so successful that it was responsible for the spectacular failure of Rossini's version at the premiere in Rome. There are about a baker's dozen of these operas the last two of which were Leopoldo Cassone's in 1922 and Alberto Torazza's in 1924.

3-Year-Old Boy Hurt In Fall From Truck

Three-year-old George Wilson, jr., of 1407 Eighth Street Southeast, was injured seriously yesterday when he fell from a moving truck in the 1400 block of E Street Southeast.

Taken to Casualty Hospital by a motorist, the boy was treated for possible internal injuries, concussion and cuts and bruises.

Auditions for Opera Groups Begin Tonight

Young men and women who aspire to sing opera will have a chance at a step in that direction, in auditions to be held tonight and tomorrow night by the Community Center and Playgrounds Department.

Two community opera groups will be organized by Mrs. Ethyl Manning, director of the Columbia Light Opera Co. Of the members chosen, a limited number will be invited to join in the company's production of "Florodora" to be presented in December.

The auditions for young men and women, 18 years or older, wil' be held at 7:30 tonight at Thomson Community Center, Twelfth and L Streets Northwest and at 7:30 tomorrow night at Roosevelt Community Center, Thirteenth and Allison Streets Northwest.

Women's Building Campaigned For

Plans for its campaign to raise funds for a women's activities building at George Washington University will be discussed at the dinner of the Women's Student Government Association at 6:30 tonight at the Iror Gate Inn. Already $1,521.72 toward the building has been raised.

Man Who Needed Help Cleared of False Alarm

Herbert Walker, 27, colored, of 1020 Lamont Street Northwest, who was arrested Sunday after pulling a fire alarm box to call help while two would-be car thieves attacked him, was freed of blame yesterday.

Walker appeared in Police Court to answer the charge of pulling a false alarm. The Corporation Counsel's office decided not to file papers, however.

Blood Tests In Paternity Case Ordered

Justice Laws Decides On Procedure, First Time in D. C. History

Blood tests for evidence in a paternity dispute will be taken next Wednesday, for the first time in Washington.

Obliged to consent to the test after resisting it in court for more than a year will be Mrs. Mary E. Beach, 19, 711 C Street Northwest, and her 14-month-old son, John Warren Beach.

Also tested will be her husband, James E. Beach, 22, a mechanic, of 905 F Street Northeast, who contends the child is not his. Beach made this charge in his reply to his wife's suit for support money.

Over Mrs. Beach's objection, the District Court ordered the blood test October 3, 1939, and the United States Court of Appeals, by a 2-to-1 decision, upheld the order several months ago.

The test, recently developed by scientists, is described as one which will supply evidence if Beach is not the child's father but will prove nothing either way if he is the father.

Justice Bolitha J. Laws yesterday ordered samples of the blood of the three persons taken by Dr. Leland W. Parr at George Washington University Hospital at 3 p. m. next Wednesday. The samples will be sent to Dr. Alexander S. Weiner, New York expert, for analysis.

John Paul Jones, Beach's attorney, has contended that the technique has advanced far enough for courts to receive the tests as evidence. Mrs. Beach's counsel, John T. Bonner, plans to object to consideration of Dr. Weiner's report, on the ground that it is not proper evidence.

Trade Board Backs Winter Parking Ban

Favors Extending Snow-Removed Zone To E. Capitol Street, Pennsylvania Avenue

The Board of Trade traffic committee yesterday voted unanimously for retention of Washington's controversial "snow removal" parking ban and recommended its extension to include the lengths of East Capitol Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast.

The ban, covering aproximately 85 miles of arterial highways, becomes effective December 15 for three months. It prohibits parking from midnight to 8 a. m. William A. Xanten, supervisor of city refuse, reported the District this winter will be "better equipped than ever before" to cope with the snow removal problem.

Funds, he told the committee, have been authorized for the purchase of 60 new snow plows and seven tractors. He added, however, that the job of cleaning city streets after a heavy snowfall is "practically impossible" unless curb parking is prohibited on a wide scale.

Hazen Visions "By-pass"

Because of the width of most Washington streets, Xanten explained, it is not possible to haul the snow away and it must be piled at the curbs. A total of 285 miles of principal thoroughfares are cleared after each fall, he said.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, guest of the committee at its meeting in O'Donnell's Restaurant, outlined his "dream" of an elaborate by-pass route shunting north-south traffic away from crowded downtown and midtown streets.

Eventually, he said, there must be a highway skirting the city from Alexandria to the Baltimore boulevard in the vicinity of Kenilworth. He envisioned a bridge or tunnel crossing the Potomac River at Alexandria and connecting with a District-built by-pass road on the opposite shore.

Many Drunk Drivers

Inspector Arthur E. Miller, chief of the new police accident investigation unit, cited figures showing an average of one person is killed here every five days, 11 are injured every day and 33 accidents a day are reported.

His squad, Miller said, is concentrating on traffic violations which are found to be causing the bulk of accidents.

He expressed surprise at the number of drunken-driving cases uncovered since his unit began functioning September 22. An average of one arrest a day is made for this offense, he said.

"And we probably would be amazed at the number of intoxicated drivers who escape arrest," Miller added.

Way to Reduce Toll

The aim of his squad, Miller declared, is to discover the chief causes of accidents and "clamp down" on infractions.

If motorists would cooperate in observing the right-of-way regulation, accidents in Washington could be cut 20 per cent, Miller added.

John Victory, chairman of the committee's group on parking, urged that funds from parking meters, now going into the general fund, be used to relieve parking troubles by providing off-street storage spaces.

Inauguration of a safety program by the Washington Lodge of Elks was outlined to the committee by Ambrose A. Durkin.

Home Hygiene Class Will Begin Tonight

A class in home hygiene and care of the sick will be started at 7:30 tonight by the District Chapter, American Red Cross, in cooperation with the Y. W. C. A. The class, to be taught by Miss Caroline Thomson, R. N., will meet Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

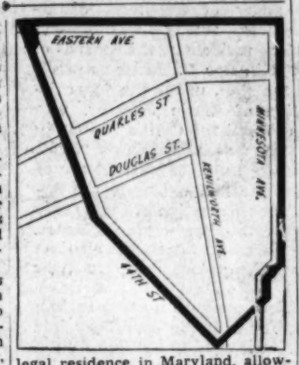
Kenilworth Citizens Seeking Modern Streetcar Service

Improvements in Recreation Center, New Community Swimming Pool and Tennis Courts Among Objectives of Association

This is the thirtieth article in a series about citizens' associations in the District of Columbia and their efforts to make the community a better place in which to live.

Modern streetcar service, improvements in the Kenilworth Recreation Center and installation of a community swimming pool and tennis courts, are being sought this fall by the 32-year-old Kenilworth Citizens Association, which has helped to bring scores of improvements to its Northeast Washington sector.



Traceable to the association's efforts in the past are the new Kenilworth School, at Forty-fourth and Ord Streets Northeast; the Recreation Center, the underpass at the Eastern Avenue railroad tracks of the B. & O. and Pennsylvania railroads.

The association was oganized as the Benning Citizens Association on November 13, 1908, merging into the Benning-Kenilworth Association in 1915 with W. H. Richardson as its first president. In February, 1919, the name of the organization was changed to the Kenilworth Citizens Association.

Got Power, Paving

One of its earliest victories in the way of civic improvements was in 1919 when members of the group obtained electric lights in the old Kenilworth School at Kenilworth Avenue and Ord Street Northeast. In 1936 the paving of Kenilworth Avenue was achieved largely through the efforts of the association.

The association has other proposals in the way of civic improvements for the area during the coming year. Continual improvements in the library and schools of the area will be stressed. Although many residents of the area have legal residence in Maryland, allowing them to vote there, the association will continue its efforts for a District vote.

Dance Planned

A large dance is planned for sometime this winter under the auspices of the association at the Kenilworth Recreation Center.

Charles M. Maize is the president of this active group. He led the association for three consecutive terms, having been elected for the last term in January, 1940.

Charles McCall, the vice president, also has served three terms. The secretary, Mrs. Mabel M. Hubbel, has served in that capacity for six years. Byron Coon is the treasurer. The association meets on the first Monday of the month in the Kenilworth School.

Mother Feels No Bitterness Over Kent's Conviction as Dupe

"I have no bitterness about the trial," Mrs. William Patton Kent, of Washington, said last night of her 29-year-old son's conviction in London yesterday on charges of violating the British Official Secrets Act.

KENT

"In view of the mitigating circumstances," she told The Post, "we are hoping for as light a sentence as is reasonable—there seems to be a reasonable doubt as to my son's premeditated guilt."

She said the young man, Tyler Kent, who was arrested last June shortly after his dismissal from the United States Embassy in London, was "ably defended by the best lawyer one could get" and that she had confidence in the justice of British courts.

Waits for Blonde's Trial

The Associated Press, reporting Kent's conviction yesterday after a secret trial, said his sentence would be postponed pending the outcome of the trial of Miss Anna Wolkoff, blonde daughter of a former Russian admiral, with whom he was arrested.

According to a close friend of the Kent family here, the young embassy clerk's dismissal and arrest resulted from his unwitting alliance with a group of foreign agents, disguised as White Russian sympathizers striving to end the present war in hopes of enlisting Germany's aid in overthrowing Bolshevism in Russia.

They represented themselves as believing that continuance of the conflict would result in exhaustion of all belligerents, leaving the way open for Red Russia to take possession of Europe, it was said.

Kent, who served five years as an interpreter at the United States Embassy in Moscow before his transfer to London September 21, 1939, did not recognize the agents for what they were, according to the explanation.

Also arrested in the drive against the espionage ring were Miss Wolkoff's father, Rear Admiral Nicholas Wolkoff, formerly of the Russian Czarist navy, and Prince Frederick, youngest grandson of Kaiser Wilhelm. Miss Wolkoff goes on trial today.

Kent's mother lives here at 2107 S Street Northwest. Her late husband was in the United States Consular Service and once ran for Governor of Virginia.

Young Kent was educated here at St. Alban's School and George Washington University and studied at Princeton and universities in Paris and Madrid before entering the diplomatic service. He was known as a brilliant linguist.

Roosevelt To Open Big Health Unit

Dedication Thursday To Include Largest Research Center In Cancer War

President Roosevelt will dedicate the $4,000,000 National Institute of Health in open-house exercises to be held on administration building grounds at 4 p. m. Thursday. The health institute, comprising six buildings including the largest cancer research unit in the world, is located on the Rockville Pike, Bethesda, Md.

Announcement of the address was made last night at the White House, where it was said the address would be of a nonpolitical nature, despite the President's intensive campaign drive scheduled for this final week before election day.

7,000 May Hear Address

The President will speak from the high portico of the central administration building facing a campus which will contain seats for 2,000 spectators and standing room for 5,000 more.

Full arrangements for the program had not been completed last night, but it was expected that Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator; Surgeon Gen. Thomas Parran, and Dr. I. R. Thompson, health institute director, would participate in the ceremonies.

The administration building is flanked by four other units: industrial hygiene, public health methods, infectionus diseases and biology, pharmacology and chemistry. The $750,000 cancer institute is off to the side.

Built with $3,800,000 PWA and directly appropriated funds, the health institute's cost, including equipment, was more than $4,000,000. All buildings have been completed, with the infectious diseases and chemistry units still to be fully equipped. The structures are of brick, Georgian style, containing subbasement, basement, three stories and an attic.

Program Expanded

Originally planned as an animal experiment station, the program was expanded into the health institute following the grant of 86 acres of land by Mrs. Luke I. Wilson, of Bethesda, and her late husband. By the end of the year 600 scientists and assistants will be carrying out research there in every phase of the Nation's health problem.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

The Washington Theater Lays a Solid Foundation

Repertory Club First Step Toward Final Goal; New Mutual Theater Society to Revive 'Road;' This, That and the Other About the Theater

THE WASHINGTON THEATER, formerly the Civic, deeply conscious of the unparalleled facilities the National Capital has to offer for the establishment of a repertory theater of the first rank—one that might conceivably become a national institution—is setting about the complex business of building such an organization from the ground up.

BELL

The advisory committee, headed by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and including many of the most distinguished names among Washington's civic-minded residents; the board of governors, with Lee D. Butler as president, and the staff, under the supervising direction of Erwin Piscator, who last season staged the Civic's eminently successful production of Shaw's "Saint Joan," starring Luise Rainer, all are of a mind that the first means to the desired end is the formation of the Repertory Club of the Washington Theater. The Garrick Club in London, more than a century old, quite frankly is their model.

All persons who, after an audition, measure up to a certain standard and are willing to comply with the conditions laid down by the Repertory Club, will be invited to join the Acting Company. It is from this group that the plays will be cast. To develop the talents of those interested, courses of instruction will be offered in all branches of the theater.

Five plays will be presented by the Repertory Club during the season of 1940-41, which will open on December 8 with "D. C. Melody," an original musical revue, with "candid camera shots behind the scenes in Washington." The schedule also includes "King Lear" and "War and Peace," which will be given its world premiere here, possibly in the National Theater. The other two plays will be selected from among Sherwood Anderson's "Winesburg," "Little Catherine," by Alfred Savoir; "The World We Make," by Sidney Kingsley; "La Parisienne," by Dumas fils, and Irwin Shaw's "The Gentle People."

The Washington Theater's center of activity now is 2020 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, in its new quarters in the former Walsh mansion.

The Capital also has several fingers in a newly formed producing unit known as the Mutual Theater Society, of which the main purpose is to resuscitate "the road." Kendall Holland, long identified with theatrical interests in this and other Eastern cities; Fred C. Schanberger, who operates the Keith Theater in Baltimore; Ray C. Thompson, local newspaperman; Arnaldo Bereguer, opera impresario, and Anthony Molina are the executives of the orgainzation, with headquarters in the Willard Hotel. The new Society's first production will star Walter Hampden in Clare Kummer's "A Successful Calamity" and will open in Hagerstown, Md., on November 13, proceeding thence through Western Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and the Carolinas. Twenty-four cities and towns will be played by each touring unit. Tentative plans have been made to star Helen Menken in the second.

Dots and Dashes

"Ballad for Americans," the magnificent composition by John Latouche and Earle Robinson, will be featured on the stage at Loew's Capitol the week of November 7 and already is in rehearsal . . . Fague Springman and 40 supporting voices will present this stirring musical story, in which Lawrence Tibbett and Paul Robeson both have been heard with special groups . . . It opened the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia, if you remember . . . "Eyes of the Navy," a special M.-G.-M. short subject, will be an important featurette on the screen at the Palace, beginning Thursday . . . Made with full cooperation of the U. S. Navy . . . On Sunday, Monday and Tuesday of next week, Sidney Lust's Cameo Theater, in Mount Rainier, Md., will present two Academy Award features on the same bill—Irene Dunne and Cary Grant in "The Awful Truth" and Ronald Colman in Frank Capra's "Lost Horizon" . . . Election returns from the stage Tuesday night . . . Casting for "The Late Christopher Bean," first production of the season of the Interior Department Recreation Association, will begin in the department's auditorium tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 . . . Maurice Evans, currently appearing in "Twelfth Night," with Helen Hayes, in Boston, will make a single appearance in this city at the National Theater on Sunday night, November 10, for the benefit of the British War Relief Society . . . Tomorrow night at 8:30, the Mask and Bauble Club of Georgetown University will present four one-act plays in Gaston Hall on the campus . . . Two comedies and two melodramas . . . Walt Disney has been awarded the Progress Medal for 1940 by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers . . . "Fantasia," opening in New York on November 13, will show why.

'Pygmalion' Wins Plaudits At National

Ruth Chatterton Scores In Return to Stage In Shavian Revival

"PYGMALION." Harold J. Kennedy, Jas Addiss and Hayden Rorke present Ruth Chatterton in the comedy in three acts and five scenes, by George Bernard Shaw. Directed by Auriol Lee; settings designed by Lemual Ayres. At the National Theater.

—The Cast—

Clara Eynsford-Hill . . . . Eleanor Wilson
Mrs. Eynsford-Hill . . . . . Myrtle Tannehill
First Bystander . . . . Mortimer H. Weldon
Sarcastic Bystander . . . . . Arthur Gilmour
Freddy Eynsford-Hill . . . . Hayden Rorke
Eliza Doolittle . . . . . Ruth Chatterton
Colonel Pickering . . . . . Dennis Hoey
Henry Higgins . . . . . Barry Thomson
Mrs. Pearce . . . . . Margaret Moffat
Alfred Doolittle . . . . . Richard Temple
Mrs. Higgins . . . . . Alice John
Maid . . . . . Vilma Royton
Tommy Atkins . . . . . Richard Bowler

An audience eager to welcome Ruth Chatterton back to the stage in the city where she made her first professional appearance, last night extended its cordial enthusiasms to numerous other members of the cast appearing in the revival of George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion," accorded its metropolitan premiere in the National Theater. The first act was more profusely punctuated than usual with tributes to individual players appearing in the star's support. Curtain calls at the end of the final act, shared equally by the entire ensemble of 13, were arbitrarily cut short at six, a record for the fledgling new season. The friendly warmth thus expressed was less ar matter of sentiment than of appreciation of an effective reading of the Shaw comedy.

While Miss Chatterton's Eliza Doolittle, the illiterate guttersnipe plucked from the curb of Covent Garden and transformed into a "duchess," acceptable in any society, by a professor of phonetics, is properly Cockney in the introductory passages of the play, the Shavian satire and cynicism, in the present interpretation, are not bogged down with the uniformly heavy accents of British speech. Perhaps they should be, but the fact remains that this performance is distinctly "American," and for that reason possibly more immediately and spontaneously amusing to some than would otherwise be the case.

A Smoothly Acted "Premiere"

Last night's performance was a particularly smooth one of a difficult play—as all of Shaw's are—being enacted by its present cast for only the third time on any stage. It realized in eminently satisfactory fashion the keen wit, the pathos and the biting satire of its author's views on middle-class English morality, the hypocrisy of the upper ten and the perplexing social and economic problems of the undeserving poor. The transmogrification of an uncouth flower girl of the streets into a grand lady, who suddenly developed self-respect, a famished heart and a soul, was laden with profound consequences. Into it Shaw dripped the biting acid of a caustic pen, but never in an amount to corrode the lighter moods of the play.

Miss Chatterton executes the transformation of the central figure with characteristic deftness and skill. Never a docile young woman, to be wrapped around any man's finger at will, she sustains a constant suggestion of self-reliance and evil eventuations for anyone who challenges her repeated assertion that "I'm a good gel, I am." Her final problem is solved with both fiery temper and gentle appeal that brings down the final curtain on a gracious solution of a precarious situation.

Excellent Male Leads

Barry Thomson, as the worker of the miracle, and Dennis Hoey, in the kindly and sympathetic role of Col. Pickering, his fellow in the study of the intricacies of speech, provide the star with two competent leading men. Mr. Thomson's is a forthright and robust portrayal that contrasts nicely with Mr. Hoey's more considerate study.

The role of Alfred Doolittle, Eliza's father, who personifies the magnificent freedom of the "undeserving poor," finally shackled by the responsibilities of respectability, seemed to these eyes and ears something less than the ideal realization of the richest part in the play. There is little "evolution" in this character as Richard Temple portrays it. He is from the beginning an aggressive figure, whose chief transformation as the action progresses is in the matter of dress rather than viewpoint or deportment.

Returns to Headline at Capitol

SIBYL BOWAN,

ALEXANDER INCE is the publisher of the new Stage Magazine, whose first issue was released yesterday. Ince's experiences in the publishing business began in Budapest more than 25 years ago. At that time he published a newspaper which showed great promise, but lack of finances made it impossible for him to publish it more than once a week . . . He was extremely popular in Budapest and was invited to the parties which were given every day in that then gay city . . . Ferenc Molnar also attended these parties, at which he saw Ince. After many of these daily meetings with the young publisher of the weekly Molnar finally told him: "Young man, I'd like you to change your policy. I would like to see your paper published daily, and see you personally weekly."

THE LEADERS of the New Deal campaign, in urging Jim Farley to forget his differences with the President and work more actively for his re-election, are quoting from a chapter marked "A Little Advice." It reads: "Another good thing to remember is that nothing is ever gained by trying to seek revenge in politics. The public has no interest in the individual who wants to 'get back' at another person because he thinks he has been ill-treated or betrayed. The man who starts out to destroy another man for revenge usually winds up by destroying himself . . . If reverses are on the way, and they usually come, I hope to be able to meet them without becoming soured or embittered." . . . The quotes are from the last chapter of "Behind the Ballots," Jim Farley's autobiography.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

New York, Oct. 28 (INS).—Jack Warner, who is supposedly in New York to rest and see the shows, is more interested in business, as usual. Jack tells me he has been in daily huddles with George Kaufman and Moss Hart about writing the play version of "One Foot in Heaven," which would play on Broadway and throughout the country with road companies at the same time the picture is released.

PARSONS

What particularly interested me about Jack's idea is that if this proves successful in stimulating interest (and how can it miss?) it will be tried with other big pictures. Warners have always liked playing "angel" to good shows, but it is an original idea to tie them up with their pictures. The experiment has big possibilities.

The way New York critics went overboard in their reviews on "Angels Over Broadway," I can't say it is a big surprise to hear that Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and Ben Hecht are going to make another picture together. When Doug was in New York he had long huddles with Hecht, and while they have no title for the idea they worked out, it is centered around a devil-may-care hero (not unlike the roles Doug, sr., used to play) set against a modern background.

Betty Grable, personal-appearing in Chicago, will come to New York for a stint and then she's heading back to the coast to get ready for the top femme role in "The Great American Broadcast." Last week we told you Betty was out of "Tall, Dark and Handsome" and being saved for something else—and this is it.

Snapshots of Hollywood and New York collected at random: Mary Astor's ex, Dr. Franklin Thorpe, is on the verge of matrimony again with Virginia Bancroft; speaking of "exes," Jane Truex (who was Mrs. Ernest Truex) left the Beverly tropics the other noon to visit the marriage license bureau with Warren Newmark; the cutest gift I've heard of in a long time is the one Victor Mature bought Betty Grable. It is a pin with the initials B. G. ? M (Betty Grable ? Mature)—in case you didn't figure it out. That's one way of popping the question; Franchot Tone and Olivia De Havilland are just pretending they don't care. Franchot, by the way, has done a complete about-face and says he's giving up the stage forever for the movies. Quite different from the way he used to feel.

Margaret Roach left the hospital Sunday, but she must rest at home; the Lloyd Nolans are expecting their baby in two weeks; a bad case of the flu delayed Irene Rich's visit to New York to welcome her new grandson; Mrs. Marie Fox, Virginia Zanuck's mother, will spend the winter in Florida;

That's all for today. Will see you tomorrow.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Oct. 28.

Now that our boys have signed for the draft and they're about to be picked, maybe they ought to know what they are getting into. At least, this is how it's done in Camp Murray, Tacoma. When 30,000 National Guardsmen went to join the Regular Army (incidentally, some of them served their country 10 and 12 years, but have to serve four weeks more before they can get their pay raised from $21 to $30, which drafted boys begin with), the boys didn't have barracks, so slept under tents, most of them without floors except good old earth. For a week there was no mess tent; they ate as well as marched in pouring rain. Regulations called for two shirts, two pairs of pants, two pairs of shoes. To heck with regulations—they got one. That's all there was—there wasn't any more. In a few weeks, 20,000 more boys join up. Sure, lumber's there to build barracks, but it will be months before they're finished. Sickness, of course, is rampant.

That guy you just squirted used to be a casting director, and I've waited for your opportunity five years." And at that George asked for a retake of the scene. . . .

POVICH

There is a distinct upturn in the registering of beefs this year, and we don't mean pedigreed bovines. Scarcely a Saturday has passed on the college football calendar, when a squawk by a coach, an athletic director or the student paper hasn't followed the final whistle. In each case, of course, it was the losing team's squawk.

A couple of weeks ago it was the Georgia coach who leaped to the ceiling and declaimed that the lateral pass play by which Columbia beat Georgia was not a lateral pass but an illegal forward, and produced the motion pictures to prove it. About the same time it was being set forth on behalf of Purdue that the Ohio State player who kicked the winning goal against the Boilermakers was ineligible to return to the game for that effort. Those bleats, like all the others, proved a waste of breath. Officials still stuck to the old-fashioned theory that the game ends with the final whistle.

The virus of the squawk also infected pro ranks the other day at Detroit. A part owner of the Redskins galloped on the field in mufti to charge that a Detroit touchdown was illegal because the play on which it occurred was a lateral pass. The officials said it wasn't. They said it was a fumble, which could be advanced, and they compromised by allowing the touchdown, shooing their heckler off the field and penalizing the Redskins 15 yards.

The other day the squawking hit a new high. The athletic director of Ohio State charged directly and emphatically that Mr. Carl Snavely, the Cornell coach, had wig-wagged signals to his quarterback all afternoon, a flagrant violation of the rules. The loser of that game, it must be remembered, was Ohio State. On the day that the winning team squawks the world will stop spinning and make a try at regaining its balance.

According to L. W. St. John, the Buckeyes' athletic director, "Snavely called practically every offensive play run by the Big Red." He said the Cornell coach used a light-colored baton to tip off his quarterback, grasping it by the end for a pass play or in the center for a sweep, with both hands in line for a smash attack. There also was the business of Snavely crossing his legs when he wanted a kick, according to St. John.

The mystery is, why was Ohio State so outraged, even if all of its allegations were true? Surely they are not so naive as to believe that coaching from the sidelines was extinguished when rules forbidding it were passed. A safe wager is that 90 per cent of the college coaches wig-wag signals from the sidelines and the practice has been approved by something akin to common consent among the coaches. Did Ohio State register its squawk with clean hands? If so, Francis A. Schmidt is a shining exception among coaches.

If, as the Ohio State athletic director says, in a seeming effort to remove the stigma of an alibi from his beef, that the bench signals had no effect on the final score, why was the squawk publicly registered? Perhaps as a gesture of Ohio State's own purity, perhaps not. The Buckeyes never were considered one of the purer teams of big-time football, at least an investigation by the Ohio State Legislature of cash subsidies to Ohio State players a few years ago would seem to indicate that the Buckeyes were not, unlike Caesar's wife, above suspicion.

Privately, every coach to whom we have ever talked, has admitted that he has been a party to wig-wagging signals from the bench. They consider it no heinous crime, nor even a mild one, to call the plays for their quarterback. The professional coaches laugh openly at the rule, and officials rarely take the trouble to enforce it.

The pro league has dispensed with the hypocrisy of the college football rule against coaching in a great measure. Realizing that there is no way to prevent surreptitious instructions from the bench, the pros lifted the rule against silence by a substitute until he has figured in one play. The sub openly carries instructions into the game. For a great many years now the colleges have been rendering mere lip service to the rule anyway. Their substitutes don't talk, but the coaches have not been above circumventing the sideline-coaching rule in various other ways.

The reluctance of coaches to refrain from wig-wagging is understandable. Their quarterbacks are, after all, boys without too much football experience. The coach prefers to take the responsibility of calling the right or the wrong play and the quarterback has come to regard him as the all-high authority. In any ball game of your choosing you can see the quarterback look to the bench for instructions on an important play, and get them.

A college coach of our acquaintance who signalled his quarterback to call certain plays without even moving a muscle, even stealthily. He had a pet play called "No. 43." When the time came for that play, the quarterback, looking to the sidelines, didn't even glance at the coach. What he did look at was the substitute warming up innocently the sidelines, and what he looked at also was the sub's number. If it was No. 43, it was perfectly plain what play the coach wanted.

Instructions to quarterbacks have even been scribbled by a coach or his aides on the white pants of the trainer who went on the field during time-outs. And in certain cases "spotters" high in the press box have flashed the signals to quarterbacks by a card system. We've even known of a case, where a trainer carried a written note into the game from the coach to the quarterback. When his closed fist aroused the suspicion of the referee and the trainer was approached, he calmly swallowed the note.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 28.—There's money in futility. Especially in the Philadelphia type of futility. The worst team in big league baseball is the Phillies. The worst team in big league football is the Philadelphia Eagles. But being the worst entitles them to first crack at the wave of new talent coming up from the minor leagues and college circles each year. And that priority can mean dough.

CONSIDINE

For instance, the Phillies, who survive each succeeding year of hopeless campaigning by selling talent to rich teams, thus making the rich teams stronger and their own hopes of ever winning a little bleaker, claimed Rufus Melton early this month. Melton is a brilliantly eccentric pitcher for Columbus. In the open market he would have brought a lot of cash, particularly if the bidding had started and mounted, as it did in Benjamin McCoy's case.

Branch Rickey, who owns Columbus with Sam Breadon, thought he had Melton thoroughly covered up. But Judge Landis decided that Melton should go on the draft list. And when the judge makes up his mind about anything it sticks, for his powers are so limitless that he could shut down any team in baseball and the team would have no civil recourse.

Anyway, Gerry Nugent, of the Phillies, drafted Melton for the standard $7,500. But before he drafted this fireballer he was in contact with Larry MacPhail, of the Dodgers. MacPhail gave him the money to draft him, then paid him $7,500 and took Melton. Then, to Nugent's horror, Rickey offered him $15,000 for Melton. But he stuck by his deal with MacPhail. Brooklyn got a good pitcher and the Phillies, who needed him a lot worse than Brooklyn did, got enough to pay the season's salary of a couple of its abysmal athletes. That's a certainty. Melton possibly may not click.

Now, we hear, Bert Bell of the Eagles, will draft Tommy Harmon of Michigan. No one needs to be reminded that the Eagles need Harmon more than they need legs and a football. If ever there was a natural pro star, it is Harmon. He is big (190), fast, versatile and the most durable back in college ranks. He has never called for "time out" for himself—a rare record. With Harmon a running threat, Davey O'Brien's passing would be that much more potent. The Eagles might start soaring, which would bear out the purpose of the player draft.

But, the story goes (and it comes from inside the league), Bell has already made a deal with George Halas, of the Bears, whereby Harmon will be shipped to Chicago after being claimed by Philadelphia. There will be a financial consideration, of course. The Eagles will pay some bills, take their lickings through 1941 and hope that another Harmon arises—to pass through their hands, just as Jay Berwanger did.

The last word from Harmon was that he wouldn't play pro ball. Whizzer White, Davey O'Brien, Sid Luckman and George McAfee said the same thing. The latter was claimed by the Eagles and is now sparking the Bears toward the title. The Eagles haven't won a game. Nile Kinnick was one star who said no and meant it. But what made up his mind is that he is getting free tuition through Iowa's law school, $4,000 a year to coach the Iowa frosh and has other contacts that bring him good pay.

Ruling Comes After Saliva Test of Crius

Hamilton, Welsh Get Penalties; Several Horses Included; Equistar Wins 'Cap

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Laurel, Md., Oct. 28.—Acting on the chemist's report of a positive saliva test taken on the horse Crius, winner of the seventh race here last Thursday, a trainer, a groom and several horses were suspended by order of the stewards today. Their cases have been referred to the Maryland Racing Commission.

The suspended trainer is George L. Hamilton, of Laurel, Md., and the groom is John Welsh.

Crius proved an easy winner of the race, jogging to the wire with speed to spare head of the A. C. C. Stable's Ace Call. As a result of the ruling, Ace Call was awarded the first-purse money while Pollenator, Dulie and Alsang were moved up a notch in the official finish.

Crius is owned by W. J. Susini, Laurel businessman. Other horses in the Susini stable which have been banned are First Money, Wildmute and Blazing Heat. These horses will be reinstated if transferred to hands sanctioned by the stewards.

This is the first charge of a doping case to be brought to light during the Maryland season. The stewards did not disclose the brand of stimulant.

Dr. Whinney Jeered

Hamilton has been campaigning horses for many years at Maryland tracks and outside the State. In recent years he has been in ill health.

The best offering on today's program, the Tred Avon Handicap for a purse of $1,500, went to Mrs. Emil Denemark's Equistar, a fleet son of the late Equipoise. The 3-year-old forged to the wire a length in advance of Cleaveland Putnam's Polymelior and two lengths ahead of H. G. Bedwell's Woodchopper. Four others competed in the prints of six furlongs and there was much disappointment when Dr. Whinny, the odds-on favorite, ran out of the pay circle.

Jockey Harry Richards and Dr. Whinny were loudly booed when they came back for the weighing-in ceremonies although the favorite was carrying 122 pounds, giving 17 to 19 pounds to his rivals.

Equistar paid $8.70 and was clocked in 1:12 1-5 for the three quarters. A good Monday crowd of 8,000 witnessed the program.

Daily Pays $52

Lukewarm horses in the betting were on both ends of the key races in the daily double, which paid $52.60. C. R. White's Bon Jour came from behind with good energy to whip, among others, Jacotte and Miss Identify to win the first race. Jockey Mannie Berg won with Mrs. C. S. Bromley's Dingmans in the third race, the son of Ladysman scoring with speed to spare over Rabbino and Pari King. Both races were for 2-year-olds over the mile and 70 yards course.

The favorite players took down a lucky bet in the day's steeplechase. Thomas Hitchcock's Fairford set most of the pace and then appeared to be through when Balk and War Lance went to the front. However, Strollin' On, which tossed his rider at the first jump, cut across the field and carried the leaders out. This gave Fairford the lead again and the horse, under Jockey Willie King's drive, held on to score with ease. Fairford paid $5.70.

Piepul May Miss Irish-Army Game

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 28 (AP).—Bad news came to the Notre Dame football forces today—Capt. Milt Piepul, hard-hitting fullback, may be unable to play against the Army at New York Saturday.

Piepul suffered torn muscles in his side during the Illinois game Saturday and although Dr. J. E. McNeel said he hoped to have the big back in shape to make the trip to New York, he would not know before tomorrow whether Piepul would be able to play.

The Irish traveling squad rested today but will resume regular drills tomorrow.

Gophers Forced Indoors by Rain

Minneapolis, Oct. 28 (AP).—A light workout today was Minnesota's first step in preparation for the clash with Northwestern at Evanston Saturday.

Rain forced the Gophers into the fieldhouse for loosening up exercises for stiff muscles. A snappy signal drill capped the day's work. Coach Bernie Bierman showed the squad motion pictures of the Iowa game, pointed out mistakes, and outlined plans for Northwestern.

Howie Straiton, reserve guard, was confined to the student health service with a sprained ankle. Joe Mernik and Bob Sweiger, both nursing minor ailments, were on hand, however.

Furman Regulars Ready for State

Greenville, S. C., Oct. 28 (AP).—Furman's grid squad, coming through the Davidson encounter with nothing more serious than bruises, settled down to intensive work today for the battle with N. C. State in Raleigh Saturday night.

Hazel Gilstrap, junior guard, and San Fleming, senior tackle, continued as the Hurricanes' only casualties. Fleming suffered a broken ankle in practice sessions last week and will be out for the rest of the season. Gilstrap is expected to join the squad in the next few days and may be in shape to play against State.

Exterminator Won't Appear At Pimlico

Champion of Old Won't Lead Parade to Post, In Event in His Honor

Special Dispatch to The Post

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 28.—Exterminator will not return to the scene of some of his former triumphs Friday at the historic old Pimlico track when the running of the Exterminator Handicap will be inaugurated. It was hoped in many quarters that the game old champion of a past era would answer the bugle and lead this new generation of distance horses to the post. It is a race being run in recognition of his greatness. But Mrs. Kilmer declined the honor of letting Old Bones appear, because of the recent, untimely death of the master of Court Manor, Willis Sharpe Kilmer.

The Exterminator Handicap will bring together some of the best distance horses in the land. Twenty thoroughbreds have been nominated for the race which will be a permanent fixture to be run in his honor at Pimlico. It is indeed fitting that the Pimlico officials should have inaugurated and named a race after the best distance horse in the land. But theirs was not the first effort in that direction. Once before Old Bones received an invitation during Mr. Kilmer's lifetime to lead a famous field to the post at Arlington Park. However, Kilmer declined this honor, saying he did not wish to subject his old favorite to the rigors of the trip.

Exterminator, a son of McGee and Fair Empress, foaled in 1915, raced for seven seasons on American tracks, winning money in 100 of 113 races in which he carried the brilliant orange, brown and green silks of Kilmer to victory. At the age of 7, when most horses have retired, Exterminator ran up a string of six successive victories which began at Pimlico in the Spring Handicap, and which further demonstrated the courage and toughness of the old warrior. These were to be his last, however, for he was retired soon after.

Now Exterminator is one of an honored group pensioned by first Mr. Kilmer and now Mrs. Kiolmer, to live out their lives in equine contentment and luxury.

Jockey Robertson To Aid War Fund If Can't Wait Wins

Baltimore, Oct. 28 (AP).—If Can't Wait wins the Pimlico Special Friday, the British War Relief Fund will get $500 from his jockey, Alfred Robertson—a generous Scotsman.

The jockey winner of the Special will get a $1,000 bonus—10 per cent of the stake.

Robertson, born in Aberdeen, Scotland, but reared in Toronto, Canada, said, "I still have many relatives in Scotland, and some of my uncles and cousins must be participating in the defense of Britain."

The Maryland Jockey Club announced revenue from pari-mutuel wagering at the Special will be donated to the war relief fund.

Williamson System Rates Irish 1st Again

Cornell, Texas A. & M. Follow After Week of Fancy Finishes; Penn-Michigan Game Is Missed

By Paul B. Williamson.

Notre Dame, still unextended after romping over Illinois, 26-0, remains at the top of the college football heap following a week of "story-book" finishes. Cornell holds to second place for coming from behind to defeat Ohio State, 21-7, and still in the third spot is Texas A. & M. which downed hard-fighting Baylor, 14-7.

As predicted here last week, the Aggies had to use all their tricks and play all their stars the full 60 minutes to skin by the tough Baylor Bears.

Although we called the turn on the Cornell-Ohio State game, Tom Harmon, Forest Evashevski and the Michigan Wolverines were too much for the Penn Quakers and were on the short end of a 14-0 score. We missed that one.

System Out Front

The Williamson system was practically all alone in picking Dartmouth, 7; Harvard, 6, Oregon State 7; U. C. L. A., 0. Tulane, 14; North Carolina, 10. Louisiana Normal, 7; Centenary, 0.

Other good picks in higher circles were Duquesne over Manhattan, 10-6; San Jose State over Santa Barbara, 13-6; Mississippi State over N. C. State, 26-10; Carnegie Tech over Case, 14-0; Colorado over Wyoming, 62-0; Kansas State over Kansas, 20-0; Texas Tech over Marquette, 20-13; Minnesota over Iowa, 34-7; Montana over Gonzaga, 13-10; Nebraska over Missouri, 20-7; Georgetown over N. Y. U., 26-0; Northwestern over Indiana, 20-7; Princeton over Rutgers, 28-13; Tennessee over Florida, 14-0; Duke over Wake Forest, 23-0; Washington over California, 7-6; Navy over Yale, 21-0.

Anticipated Ties

We anticipated the closeness of some of the scores and the top-heaviness of others. Some of last week's ratings were so close that the following ties, within the rating point or so of each other, are victories for the system: Doane 6, Hastings 6; Morris Harvey 7, Davis-Elkins 7; Georgia 7, Kentucky 7; Michigan State 0, Santa Clara 0; Texas Mines 0, Tempe Teachers 0; Washington State 6, Oregon 6; San Diego State 0, Fresno State 0.

Best picks among the smaller fellows were Ouaihita over Commerre, Weatherford over Edmond Teachtrs out in Oklahoma, Baldwin-Wallace over Akron, Dayton over Cincinnati, Howard College over Southwestern of Tennessee, Louisiana Tech over Illinois Wesleyan, and West Texas State over St. Benedict.

Other successful choices in the middle bracket were Durant over Oklahoma City, Howard Payne over Southwestern Texas, Mount Pleasant over Ypsilanti, S. F. Adstin over San Marcos, Wichita over Washburn, West Chester over Albright, Cedar Falls over Pittsburgh, Trinity over Coast Guard, Colby over Bowdoin, Colorado State over New Mexico, Grinnell over Cornell College, Toledo over Kalamazoo, Montana State over Greeley, Redlands over Pomona, Rensselaer over Union, N. Y., Williams over Tufts, and Youngstown over Tennessee Tech.

The Williamson System's prediction record last week was the worst in eight years with a percentage of

Intercollegiate Head Sent Charges Against Coach of Cornell

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 28.—A little white cylinder today stirred up a formal protest that Cornell's Carl Snavely directed play of his football team from the bench against Ohio State Saturday.

Ohio State's athletic director, L. W. St. John, charged that Snavely's manipulations of the cylinder signaled the quarterback what plays to call as Cornell rolled over the Buckeyes, 21-7, in their intersectional clash at Ithaca, N. Y.

The protest citing Snavely for "a gross violation of the official football rules" and a "breach of sportsmanship" went to Asa S. Bushnell, executive director of the Eastern Intercollegiate Association, with a copy to James Lynah, Cornell's athletic administrator.

Snavely Sunday termed St. John's assertions "unwarranted and contrary to fact" and said that the complaint should have been made to game officials. St. John told reporters the officials had been asked to watch for signaling, but he observed that it was difficult for them to watch anything but the game.

St. John's protest expressed belief that alleged signaling was unknown to other Cornell athletic officials.

Not only was the signaling detected, said St. John, "but as the game progressed we were enabled to forecast the play to be called by the manipulation of the cylinder in Coach Snavely's hand."

St. John expressed doubt, though, that the signaling had any "very direct bearing on the outcome" and praised Cornell as a "great team." He declined comment on whether the incident would permanently rupture relations with the Big Red, inaugurated last year.

Bushnell, in a Princeton, N. J., hospital to have a broken arm reset, was unavailable for comment.

Fencing Exhibition Scheduled Tonight

A fencing exhibition will feature the weekly meeting tonight of the Women's Fencing Club at George Washington University. Miss Principe, one-time District champion, and Anthony Messinio, local instructor, will participate in the demonstration. The club will meet at 7:30 in Recreational Hall at the University.

Billy Boyd Beats Moore By Decision

Aging Tar Threatens To Kayo Colored Knockout Specialist In 10-Round Bout

By Al Hailey

Buddy Moore, Eddie Mead's heavyweight knockout specialist from New York, changed his pants but not his luck last night in Riverside Stadium and as a result was hammered into submission in ten rounds by a slow-moving but effective punching Bill Boyd, baldheaded former sailor from Baltimore before 1,616 fans.

Boyd threatened to knock out the inexperienced colored fighter no less than three times and just managed to avoid being knocked out himself before literally beating the pants off Moore.

The decision for Boyd was unanimous, but it was a close fight all the way, with Moore fighting just the type of battle the Baltimorean likes—slugging and rushing in close.

Moore Fades

Moore, winner of six of his seven pro fights by knockouts, managed to survive a fifth-round drubbing in which Boyd had him staggering and hanging on, his eyes gazing dazedly about, and after that the aging former gob gradually went down hill.

In the fifth, Boyd rushed out and ran promptly into a siege of hard left hooks into his none too firm midsection and was doubled up in pain momentarily. Then he put on a driving two-handed attack, slashing Moore in two places at the corner of his left eye.

A whistling uppercut to the heart had Moore staggering around on rubbery legs, and then Boyd shot a right uppercut to the jaw, another to the heart and then hammered away on Moore's eye.

It was the first venture of Ray Alvis into the Washington fight picture and marked the return of Goldie Ahearn, former partner of Promoter Joe Turner, as matchmaker. The crowd of "first nighters" paid out a net gate of $1,628.20 to see the business.

The pants-changing episode occurred in the ninth between the eighth and ninth rounds in Moore's corner after the New Yorker's boxing trunks had been split up the back as he ducked a wild swing by Boyd.

On The Post score sheet, Boyd won five rounds, Moore won three and two were even. There were no knockdowns.

Boyd Almost KO'd

In the sixth round, Moore, who was putting everything into every punch he threw, gave Boyd a terrific body beating and slammed the Baltimorean into the ropes with a looping right to the jaw. Boyd was out on his feet for an instant, but the green 18-year-old Moore didn't know how to finish him. Moore constantly disobeyed instructions from his corner and chose to keep fighting in close instead of staying away and boxing Boyd per directions.

One of the roughest fights seen in Washington in three years was staged by Jackie Carter, local lightweight, and Bobby Woods, of Baltimore, Carter was given the decision after six rounds of wrestling, tumbling through the ropes and fighting on the floor. The crowd loved it, however. Boyd weighed 187¾, Moore, 191¼.

Everett Rightmire, Minnesota, featherweight, defeated Marcus Pitts in the six-round semifinal; Johnny Kaplovich, Baltimore heavy, took an eight-round verdict over Joe Frederick, and Tommy Ricco drew with Pee Wee Lewis.

Cards, Yanks Split Third-Place World Series Shares

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 28.—Commissioner K. M. Landis revealed tonight the division of the World Series basball pot for the third-place clubs—St. Louis Cardinals and New York Yankees.

The pool for each of the clubs amounted to $20,220.70.

The Yankees cut 32 players in for a full share, $546.59, leaving the remainder for seven other employes of the club.

The Cardinals split full shares of $711.45 between 28 men, splitting the remaining $300 between two other employes.

Walker Kayoes Trammell in Fifth

Baltimore, Oct. 28 (AP).—Jack Walker, 186, Columbus, Ohio, knocked out Jack Trammell, 192½, Negro of Youngstown, Ohio, in the fifth round of a scheduled ten-round fight tonight.

The 6-foot 4-inch Trammell used his left to good advantage in the early rounds, but Walker found the range in the fourth. In the fifth he loosed a two-fisted attack that stretched Trammell over the ropes where he took the count. Eddie Finnazzi, 149, Baltimore, scored a technical knockout in the fifth round over Tony Reno, 152, New York, in the semifinal.

Nats' Pilot Given First Consideration

Action, Climaxing a Season of Turmoil, Is No Surprise to Outgoing Manager

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Oct. 28.—The Cleveland Indians closed one of the most bizarre chapters in baseball history by "firing" Oscar Vitt, the manager whose ouster 12 players demanded in an unprecedented rebellion last June.

Even Vitt was not surprised.

Club President Alva Bradley read Vitt's requiem with the terse announcement:

"We have decided not to renew Oscar Vitt's contract."

At his Oakland, Calif., home, Vitt said:

"I can't exactly say that I am surprised. At no time were next year's plans discussed with me and I knew long before the close of the season that unless drastic changes were made it would be impossible for me to work under the present circumstances.

Vitt Offers Sympathy

"It doesn't look as though these changes are being made so I am just as well satisfied.

"I made plenty of money for the Indians in the last three years and I have no regrets. Unless I get a job that will pay me well I presume old Os will just retire.

"Whoever gets the job has my best wishes—also my sympathy."

The club's decision opened wide the field of speculation over a 1941 pilot.

"I am not certain now when or how a new manager will be selected," Bradley said after a directors' meeting. "Perhaps the directors will study the applicants and leave the formal naming to me."

Harris on Inside Track

Bradley said he had a long list of applicants, but it was generally believed Bucky Harris, Washington pilot, was being given first consideration. Like Sewell, Cleveland coach; Roger Peckinpaugh, former Redskin manager, and Mickey Cochrane, former Detroit mentor, also have been mentioned frequently for the role of manager No. 15 in the Cleveland dynasty. Bradley confirmed last week that he had conferred with Harris and Sewell.

Vitt, who came here in 1938 after piloting Newark to the International League title, brought the Indians home second this year, one game off the pace of the champion Detroit Tigers. The club finished third in his first two seasons.

Vitt was the fifth manager here since Tris Speaker won the city's only pennant with the 1920 team. Jack McAllister, Peckinpaugh, Walter Johnson and Steve O'Neill walked the plank ahead of him.

Pitcher Bob Feller, one of the protesting players, commented at his home in Van Meter, Iowa:

"I hope that everything will be for the best."

Cornell 'Conscripts' Gridmen, Charges Harvard Paper

By the United Press

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 28.—Cornell University "conscripts" its football teams and should not be allowed to play Harvard, the Harvard Crimson, undergraduate daily, said today in an article on subsidization of athletic teams.

The Crimson quoted a letter allegedly sent to Cornell clubs which showed that New York alumni alone sent nine students to the university and that eight of them became varsity football players and the other a member of the varsity basketball and baseball teams.

Among those given scholarships for "all-around ability," the Crimson said, were K. G. Brown, 1939 football cocaptain; H. F. McCullough, varsity tailback and potential All-American; Walter Scholl and W. J. Murphy, both varsity backfield men.

Cornell and Harvard were not scheduled to meet this year, but they play next year and the Crimson said that the charges of subsidization against Cornell were to show that "the two institutions cannot meet each other on equal terms."

Wisconsin Names Tennant Captain

Madison, Wis., Oct. 28 (AP).—Wisconsin gridders saw a movie with a happy ending today—their last-minute 14-to-13 victory over Purdue.

Coach Harry Stuhldreher excused the regulars from heavy workout but sent his reserves against the freshmen in a scrimmage session.

Johnny Tennant, veteran halfback, was named captain for the homecoming game Saturday against Illinois.

Last week's only casualty was Mark Hoskins, sophomore first string back, who aggravated an ankle injury. Stuhldreher said, however, that Hoskins should see action against the Illini.

Tinsley Hurt, Quits Gridiron for Season

Chicago, Oct. 28 (AP).—Gaynell Tinsley, star end of the Chicago Cardinals, turned in his togs for the season today when an examination revealed he had suffered torn ligaments in his left knee in Sunday's game with Cleveland.

Tinsley suffered the injury in the second quarter when he tackled Parker Hall, Cleveland's ace runner and passer. The end was an All-National League selection in 1938, but did not play last season.

Services for Keltner's Dad Set for Today

Milwaukee, Oct. 28 (AP).—Funeral services for Fred Keltner, 63, father of Kennth (Kenny) Keltner, third baseman of the Cleveland Indians, will be held here Tuesday. He died Saturday after an illness of six months.

Neely's Rice Has Daffy Conference in Deplorable Fix

By Felix McKnight.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 28.—Slow-Poke Jess Neely, a deep South boy who shuffled into the Southwest Conference this season for a gamble on a tough situation, had the daffiest of all football leagues in a deplorable condition today.

The very nature of this mellow, drawlin' man who abandoned one of the best spots in the game at Clemson to tinker with Rice Institute's sputtering machine presaged anything but trouble when he arrived this fall.

But he's dropped dynamite smack into the middle of everything.

Jess Neely has just about stolen the show from everything but the monotonous march of a Texas A. & M. team that has won 16 straight games.

Not a big name glittered on the Rice lineup when Neely moved into a murderous schedule. Two or three sophomores stood out in the first four games, but "coordination" is about the biggest name around the Owl Camp.

It was that, plus some of Sophomore T. A. Weems' running, that sent unbeaten, untied Texas spinning into a 13-0 defeat Saturday. It could be called an upset, but anything Rice does from now on won't be upsetting.

Cowboy Jack Crain, admittedly injured but still a threat, was no menace to the staunch Rice defense. He couldn't move—sat on the back row and watched 200-pound Sophomore Weems steal his running thunder.

The Owls dropped a 6-15 decision to Tulane several days ago, but they have trounced Centenary, 25-0; Louisiana State, 23-0, and Texas, 13-0.

Now they loom in front of the poisonous Texas Aggie team, a team that weathered one of it's stormiest sessions last Saturday in disposing of a Baylor team that had worked itself into a terrific state for the Cadet game, only to fall, 7-14, as the sixteenth consecutive victim of the massive Red machine.

Wilbur Moore Lost to 'Skins 2 Weeks With Fractured Rib

May Be Back For Dodger Game Nov. 10

Farkas Expected To Be in Uniform For Chicago Bears Game November 17

Wilbur Moore, running and blocking mainstay in the Redskins' second and fourth period backfield, suffered a fractured rib in Sunday's game in Detroit and will miss Sunday's game here with Pittsburgh, X-rays revealed yesterday.

Technically, the injury is a separation of the cartilage from a lower right rib. Loss of Moore, valuable weakside running threat, will be a heavy blow to the Redskins, but there's a possibility he'll be able to play November 10 when the Skins take a jaunt to Brooklyn to meet the Dodgers, Dr. Pete Moran, club physician, said.

Andy Farkas, who underwent an operation on his right knee September 2, will make his return to the line-up November 17 when the Skins meet the powerful Western Division leaders, the Chicago Bears, here, Coach Ray Flaherty disclosed yesterday.

Moore to Rest

Moore probably will get a lot of rest between now and the date for the Bear game in order to have the Redskins' running attack at its peak for the Bears.

Ed Justice, wingback, recovering from a separated clavicle, also should be ready for action by November 17, Dr. Moran said. Farkas, leading touchdown scorer last year in the National Pro League, is expected to furnish the touch needed to spur the Redskins into a national championship.

Farkas has been making rapid strides toward regaining the strength in his knee, and Flaherty is confident the stocky little fullback will be in top form.

The Redskins returned from the Detroit Lions game yesterday morning an odds-on favorite to take the Eastern Division championship, while the Bears' impressive 37-21 victory over the New York Giants established them as the ultimate champions in the West.

'Skins Retain Lead

Despite the fact that Slingin' Sammy Baugh's smart quarterbacking in playing down the passing attack against the Lions, the Redskins maintained their lead in the air and at the same time protected their advantage over the other nine National League elevens in scoring and ground-gaining for the second straight week.

Detroit wasn't given much chance to "bottle up" the Redskins' passing attack, for Baugh chose to set the Lions back with amazingly effective quick kicks and run them dizzy from every angle.

Nevertheless, the Redskins have a passing efficiency of 59 per cent with 79 completions out of 132, while Philadelphia is in second place with 90 out of 218 for an average of 41 per cent. The Redskins lead in scoring with 167 points, Green Bay is second with 137 and the Bears third with 129. They stand in the same order in ground covered. Incidentally, Detroit still held to its record as the best defensive team in the league. The Lions have allowed seven opponents only 65 points.

Redskins' Center, Vic Carroll, Father Of Twin Sons

If the Redskins are still operating in 1962—and the way they're going now it appears they will be—they may look for a fine pair of twin ends name of Pat and Mike Carroll.

The potential wingmen are the new sons of Redskin Center Vic Carroll, born to Mrs. Carroll yesterday at 10:15 a. m. at Columbia Hospital. Flabbergasted at the news that he was the father of twins, Vic was nonplussed for only a moment. "It's a pretty sure bet they'll be Pat and Mike," he said. "We had agreed that if it was a boy his name would be Michael. Two of them sort of stumped us for a moment, but as Irish is predominant in our family, I think they'll be Pat and Mike." The mother, the former Miss Lillian Gantner, of Beverly Hills, Calif., and sons were reported doing well. Carroll, now playing his fifth year with the Redskins, is a former University of Nevada star.

Vanderbilt on Air With McDonald

Alfred Gwynn Vanderbilt, president of the Maryland Jockey Club and originator of the Pimlico Special race, will be the guest of Arch McDonald's "Sports Review" tonight at 6:15 o'clock on Station WJSV.

Friday's Pimlico Special involving Challedon, Mioland and Can't Wait will be the topic of Vanderbilt's interview with McDonald.

The youthful Vanderbilt, who has built the Pimlico race into "race-of-the-year" ranking, will discuss with McDonald the background of the event and the circumstances of this year's contest. McDonald, who boasts more or less fame as a handicapper himself, will give his personal prediction of the outcome.

Hampden-Sydney Loses Captain

Hampden-Sydney, Va., Oct. 28 (AP).—The Hampden-Sydney football camp beginning a week of drills for the University of Richmond game, reported today that Capt. Frank Brown, of Portsmouth, left tackle, was lost to the team for the remainder of the season.

Brown, a brother of Pres Brown, Washington and Lee back, has established a reputation, here for endurance and spirit.

Coach Herman (Red) Smith's staff also said that Walter (Toad) Thurman, of Charleston, W. Va., would be unable to play against the Spiders at Richmond Saturday.

Wilbur Moore Benched by Injury

Here's Wilbur Moore, Redskin star in the second and fourth-period backfield, in a typical action shot. He won't be able to do this for two weeks because of a separation of the cartilege from a right rib. He was injured Sunday in Detroit and there's a slight chance he'll play against Brooklyn a week from next Sunday

Frederick, Md., Keeps an Eye On Pimlico—There's a Reason

The peaceful burg of Frederick in Frederick County, Md., was made famous almost 80 years ago when an old lady poked her head from an attice window and defiantly stood by her convictions before a hostile army. That was Barbara Frietchie, since immortalized in Whittier's famous poem. The peaceful community of Frederick, was once more, in 1939, aroused from its traditional lethargy. Challedon of Frederick won the Preakness Stakes that spring. A native of the rich soil of Frederick County had again deded all comers and gone down in history as a hero.

Today the roll of honor in Frederick is inscribed in huge letters with the names of its two great heroes: Barbara Frietchie and Challedon; both thoroughbreds in, every sense of the word.

Along the Roads

Driving down the Frederick Pike today signs along the approaches to the town urge the visitor to visit the Barbara Frietchie House. Passing on through the town, and then a short detour out into the rolling blue grass country, the visitor passes an unpretentious breeding farm. No sign is hung there marking the birthplace of Challedon. Time will take care of that.

Last year when Challedon won the Pimlico Special and was crowned the finest thoroughbred of the year in America, the Chamber of Commerce on behalf of all the citizens of Frederick, town and county, sent a floral wreath to grace the back of their hero—win, lose or draw. Challedon won.

And now today the good people of Frederick are in a dilemma. Challedon, their twentieth century hero, on November 1 will face the finest and fleetest thoroughbreds in America in the Pimlico Special. He will be striving to retain his title. Opposing him, among others, it is expected will be a horse called Hash. But it isn't the horse which has the citizens of Frederick in a dither, it's a man named John Gaver, who trains Hash.

Gaver Is Native

John Gaver, like Barbara Frietchie and Challedon, is a native of Frederick. He is a young man who has made good in a great big way. He is charged with the training of the Greentree Stable, one of the oldest, most respected and most successful racing stables on the American turf.

The only solace the Frederick folk can find in the situation is that if Challedon is to be displaced it may possibly be done by the horse which the native son, John Gaver, trains. If so, there'll be a new name emblazoned on the roll of honor in old Frederick town.

Michigan Gridders See Movies of Game

Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 28 (AP).—Michigan's gridders took life easy today, being rewarded with a holiday from field labors for the victory over Penn Saturday. The squad watched movies of the Penn game and heard Scout Benny Oosterbann report on Minnesota. The Wolverines, idle next Saturday, meet the Gophers at Minneapolis November 9 in what is expected to be a tougher battle than any yet experienced.

'Stop Reagan' Is Battle Cry At Annapolis

Tars Out to Avenge Last Year's Defeat He Helped Bring About

Annapolis, Oct. 28.—"Stop Reagan," was the slogan that pervaded the Naval football camp today, as players began preparations for the game with the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia on Saturday.

Frankie Reagan, backfield ace of the Quakers, was the main cog in bringing about the defeat of the Middies last season. Michigan stopped him Saturday at Ann Arbor, and the wise ones here believe that the Tars are capable of turning the trick.

The Middies have fully demonstrated their defensive ability in five successive victories thus far, and the net result of efforts of the opposition have been five first downs, and considerably less than 100 yards gained by rushing.

The Naval lads opened their season by trouncing William and Mary College, the Virginians failing to register a first down. University of Cincinnati covered the required distance once, Princeton accounted for two and Drake and Yale one each.

There appears no question about the power of Navy's defense, although it is felt that the game with Penn will be the first actual test. Penn is three deep in players. Navy, on the other hand, has two regular teams of about equal strength and a number of capable reserves.

Local observers feel that Saturday's contest will be waged largely between the respective lines, and fans are inclined to believe the Tars will be more than able to hold their own. More than that, these same observers feel that Navy has not uncovered its full crop of offensive plays, notwithstanding the fact five opponents were disposed of in rather decisive fashion.

Navy was somewhat late in getting to the field today, because of academic routine, and most of the practice was held under floodlights. A scrimmage between a combination of junior varsity players and the shock troops of squad B, the latter using Penn formations, featured the workout.

Juzwik Stock Booming at Notre Dame

Halfback Who Only Runs Gained 95 Yards In 8 Tries Saturday

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 28.—Notre Dame has yet to prove its right to ranking as a great football team—but Steve Juzwik already has made his mark as one of the great halfbacks of recent Irish gridiron history.

Six weeks ago this 22-year-old youth who does not pass or kick, but sticks to running, was just one of a half-dozen candidates for the right halfback spot on the Irish varsity. Today after four victories have sent Notre Dame roaring toward a possible national championship and its first undefeated and untied season since 1930, he is the main cylinder in a powerhouse attack which has seen the Irish score 87 points to none for the opposition in their last two starts.

In Notre Dame's first three games this season, Juzwik averaged 14.5 yards every time he carried the ball and led all Irish scorers. And in Notre Dame's 26-to-0 victory over Illinois Saturday, he was a great back, the kind of a game-breaking player without which no team could hope to become a championship aggregation.

Against the Illini this stocky 185-pounder carried the ball eight times for a total gain of 95 yards by rushing. His longest sprint, one of 22 yards, was followed by a 6-yard touchdown jaunt in the final period. He had other runs of 19 and 15 yards and once gained 9 after being trapped far behind the scrimmage line, only to twist and fight clear with a remarkable demonstration of shiftiness and speed.

He is a fine pass receiver. He caught a 29-yard aerial from Bob Saggau for the second Irish touchdown and set up the third Notre Dame score with a spectacular catch of a pass on the Illini 3-yard marker.

Pass the Baloney, Please

Passing the "baloney" was never better demonstrated than here, where John Noppenberg, Pittsburgh Steeler halfback, dishes it up. A bologna sausage maker by trade, Noppenberg is supposedly practicing for the Steelers' invasion of Griffith Stadium Sunday to meet the Redskins

Babich or Other Route-Going Hurler Being Sought by Bosox

By George Kirksey.
United Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 28.—Tom Yawkey, Boston Red Sox owner, says he won't be at all surprised if the American League makes several important trades during the winter . . . Yawkey would like to land a route-going pitcher to bolster the Red Sox feeble staff but asks: "Where could you get the kind of a man we need without giving up a star? And we are not going to give up our key men." . . . Johnny Babich, who won 14 games for the Athletics last season in his freshman year, may be sought by the Red Sox because of his ability to beat the Yankees.

The Yankees' rookie infielders, Phil Rizzuto and Gerald Priddy, correspond with each other all during the winter . . . Rizzuto lives on Long Island and Priddy in Los Angeles . . . they are very close buddies and Priddy has been in several fist fights over the diminutive Rizzuto . . . once Priddy, who weighs about 185, almost smacked one of his own teammates over a trick he perpetrated on the little Italian . . . Rizzuto is addicted to airsickness and also gets ill sometimes when he rides on a train . . . elevators also make his stomach do flip-flops.

Bucky Walters is under contract to the Reds for next season, having signed a 2-year agreement before the 1940 season . . . Hank Greenberg is said to have received two $5,000 bonuses from Walter O. Briggs during the 1940 season . . . most ball clubs will be late sending out their 1941 contracts . . . they want to wait and see what happens in the draft.

There's nothing to that rumor going around that Yawkey may sell the Red Sox and then buy the Yankees . . . Frank Reagan, Penn football star, denies that he's signed a contract with the Yankees but reliable information says he will as soon as he winds up his collegiate athletic career with the Quakers this spring . . . Paul Christman, Missouri's star passer and a first baseman, also is said to be ticketed for the Yanks' chain . . . Brooklyn has the inside track in the negotiations for Kirby Higbe, Phillies' ace who won 14 and lost 19 . . . Luke Hamlin, Johnnah Hudson and other players and a large chunk of cash are likely to go in the deal to land Higbe.

Three youngsters who don't have to worry about the draft are Hal Newhouser, Tigers' southpaw, who won't be 20 until next August; Frankie Gustine, Pirates' second baseman, who won't be 21 until next February, and Johnny Lucadello, Browns' rookies, who is only 20 . . . . Pepper Martin, new pilot of the Cardinals' Sacramento club, has asked Branch Rickey to let him have Don Gutteridge for one year and he'd guarantee to send him back a real big leaguer . . . The Nats are counting heavily on George Archie, drafted from Seattle, filling the first base gap next season . . . Archie recently nosed out Lou Novikoff, Los Angeles star coming up to the Cubs, for the Coast League's most valuable player award.

Augie Galan's fractured knee is healing so slowly that the hustling Cubs' outfielder may not be ready to go by spring training . . . Tommy Holmes has uncovered the fact that Freddy Fitzsimmons' record of 16 victories against 2 defeats the past season is a new National League percentage record.

V. M. I. Preps For Upsetting Wm. and Mary

Squadron's Second Homecoming Battle To Occur Saturday

Special Dispatch to The Post

Lexington, Va., Oct. 28.—The Fighting Squadron of the Virginia Military Institute will play its second homecomng game of the season Saturday, when Coach Allison (Pooley) Hubert's Cadets entertain the Indians of William and Mary on Alumni Field. Game time is 2:30 p. m.

Capt. Byron (Ripper) Walker and his teammates collaborated with the weather man to put a damper on Virginia's homecoming on October 19, and "Bosh" Pritchard, Nelson Catlett, "Son" Shelby, Joe Muha, and company are determined that Coach Carl Voyles and his cohorts shall not mar the happiness of V. M. I.'s alumni and cadets on November 2.

Nevertheless, Backfield Coach and Chief Scout Russ Cohen reports that the Indians by next Saturday will be the best club V. M. I. has met this season next to Duke, the only team to hold the Cadets scoreless in the first five games. The V. M. I. coaching staff will take measures accordingly.

Saturday's clash at Lexington will be the eighteenth in a serise that started 35 years ago. V. M. I. has won 15 and lost 2 games to date. There have been no ties. The Indians won in 1932 and 1933. The teams did not meet last year, but the Cadets won five in a row from 1934 through 1938, holding the Indians scoreless in three of the five games.

Besides the football game on Saturday, other athletic events as well as military and social activities have been planned for hundreds of alumni and thousands of visitors expected for the week-end by Maj. Herbert Jacob, alumni secretary.

Boesch Seeks No. 9 on Arena Mat Thursday

With eight straight to his credit, Paul Boesch, California groan artist, will go after No. 9 Thursday night at Turner's Arena in a special 30-minute bout against Chris Zaharias.

Headlining the show are Warren Bockwinkle, the St. Louis flash, and Babe Zaharias, brother of Chris. It will be a return match, with Bockwinkle seeking to erase the memory of last week's much-booed decision in favor of the Greek Demon.

Good news to the mat fans is the announcement that the popular two-man team match will be waged this week. It brings together Eddie Newman, formerly of the firm of Newman and Plummer, and Herbie Freeman against Tommy Rae and Tiger Taskar.

Green Bay, Wis., Oct. 28 (AP).—Eddie Jankowski, Green Bay packer fullback, who suffered a knee injury in yesterday's victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers, will be unable to play Sunday against the Chicago Bears, team physician W. W. Kelly said today.

Al Houghton Wins District Open Title With a Subpar 141

L. Worsham Finishes 2d; Gibson Next

Ferrier Ties Bogart For Amateur Honors; Cox, Beach, Walper Finish in Money

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Albert Livingston Houghton, who in his twentieth year of local golf has complied his most impressive scoring streak, put a fitting end to the major local affairs by winning the District Open Championship yesterday at Congressional Country Club with a three-under par 141 total.

The Beaver Dam professional, who tied for the Maryland Open, won the Bedford Open and lost the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. by a single shot, continued his consistent 70-shooting to beat the field by three strokes and win first prize of $100.

Lewis Worsham, the young Burning Tree mentor, led Houghton at the end of the first nine with a 36 to 37 but they were tied for the halfway lead with 71s. Worsham took five shots on the par three twenty-seventh hole, however, and Houghton passed him there by a shot and went on to win with a great back nine of 33, two under par.

Australian in Tie

Worsham hit the ball perfectly according to his playing partners, Wiffy Cox and Leo Walper, but Houghton's greater experience and his stretch finish produced and Worsham's even par total of 44 earned him only second money of $50. Houghton's rounds were 70-71 and Worsham's 71-73.

Jim Ferrier, Australia's National Open and Amateur champion from Sydney, who is spending a week here en route to Florida where he will await the start of the winter tour, finished in a four-way tie for fifth place and tied Ralph Bogart, the two-time District champion, for low amateur honors. Bogart received the silver plate as Ferrier defaulted his right to the trophy.

Ferrier, who hits the ball a country mile off the tee, played good tee-to-green golf in his rounds of 74, 75, but six three-putt greens accounted for his 36-hole total of five over par. He won low amateur honors in most of the midsummer tourneys, and also captured the Chicago District Amateur title. He plans to make the entire winter tour before returning to Australia.

Andy Gibson Third

Andy Gibson, the smooth-stroking Baltimore pro, who won his first major title at Congressional, the Maryland Open, three years ago, finished third with 72, 74—146 and won $35. The host pro, defending champion and favorite, Wiffy Cox, was next with 73, 75—148. Wiffy said, "I never worked harder, but I also got a couple of bad breaks."

Two pros, Leo Walper and Ralph Beach, tied with Ferrier and Bogart at 149, and the professionals divided fifth money prize of $25. Walper was 73 in the morning, started with three bogeys in the afternoon, but recovered for a 76, while Beach was 74, 75.

The prize money was made up of entry fees from the 24-man field, contributions from Congressional members and a $100 purse addition by the District Golf Association.

Houghton Bags Seven Birdies

Houghton missed par on only four holes all day, two that he three-putted, another where he used his putter from off the edge of the green and failed to get down in two and the par three thirtieth, where he was trapped and lost a stroke to par. His reply to the par lapses was seven birdies, two on the eighth hole, chipping dead to the pin each time and two on the eleventh, where he dropped respective morning and afternoon putts of 15 and 60 feet. In succession he birdied the thirty-first and thirty-second holes, the shots that won the title.

Several of the boys had trouble, Rut Coffey, the Mid-Atlantic P. G. A. champ, took 78 in the morning before he came back with 74, while Cliff Spencer didn't return a card after he three-putted three greens and four-putted another.

Annual Purple, St. John's Game Set Saturday

Schoolboy Card Lists 2 Interhigh Battles, Central, W.-L. Rivalry

By Bill Burnett

The schoolboy gridiron get-together that annually outdraws almost every other game—St. John's vs. Gonzaga—tops this week's program, being set for Griffith Stadium Saturday afternoon, but no less than three other engagements might steal the thunder from the Catholic high schools.

Friday there'll be a meeting of Central and Washington-Lee, of Arlington, at Central Stadium. No title hinges on the outcome, and neither team has an undefeated record to protect. But a victory will give either the Vikings' Coach Hardy Pierce or the Little Generals' Coach Johnny Baker, a pair of brothers-in-law and torrid rivals, one of his most coveted triumphs of the season.

Also on Friday are interhigh games between Eastern and Anacostia, and between Tech and Western.

With Western as certain as taxes of capturing the Western Division championship in the public school series, only the Eastern Division title has yet to be clinched. Friday's games will do much to accomplish this—if they don't further muddle the issue between the teams involved, Eastern, Anacostia and Tech.

Eastern's Tide rides along on a one-game lead, but a slip in its clash with Anacostia ties things up. Tech has only a scoreless tie to show for its only outing and must trim the rampaging Westerners to stay in the running.

Once again Gonzaga is conceded a terrific edge as it puts in final licks for its twenty-first meeting with the lads from Vermont Avenue. Last year and the year before it was favored just as highly, however, and both times lost to a Johnnie team which had pointed all year to the game. In 1938 it was 15-12 favoring the Cadets and in 1939 it was 20-0.

This time Coach Orrel Mitchell and Purple players feel they can't miss. Their only loss was a misleading 20-0 flailing by Central and since then they've tripped one of the town's toughest, Eastern, and romped over Tech. The Johnnies have a victory over Calvert Hall and a tie with Anacostia to their credit and that's all. Both teams are expected to be in top condition for the battle so, as usual, anything can be expected to happen.

With Washington-Lee's string of 15 victories at an end as a result of a 9-6 beating by Wilson High, of Portsmouth, last Saturday, the Little Generals will probably tear into Central mercilessly Friday, hoping to avenge themselves. They will be favorites by a wide margin.

That loss for W.-L., incidentally, ruined the last undefeated, untied record of a high school in this vicinity. Eastern, the next to last to fall, had its chain broken week before last when Gonzaga stepped in for a 6-0 decision. Tech, tied once, was roundly beaten by the same improving Purple eleven last week.

This week-end's card will be rounded out by three other games Friday and two Saturday. Roosevelt, with its stunning 7-6 victory over Central still fresh in its mind and likely to stay there for a long time, moves down to Fredericksburg, Va., for a game with James Monroe High; Wilson entertains Georgetown Prep, and Landon is host to Boys Latin, of Baltimore, in Friday engagements.

Saturday, George Washington, of Alexandria, plays Lane High in Charlottesville, Va., and Episcopal meets Randolph-Macon Academy in Front Royal.

Hoya Practice Canceled By a Mysterious Notice

Proves to Be a Misunderstanding, However; Four Local Colleges Hit by Varied Injuries

By Jack Munhall

Comedy vied with tragedy for attention on the college football front yesterday. Injecting a note of levity into scene frought with moans of anguish from the four local college squads, all of which have temporarily lost a key player by injury was a mysterious notice that canceled the day's practice at Georgetown to the dismay of Coach Jack Hagerty.

Practice Canceled

Even the loss of Bill McLaughlin, hard-running sophomore fullback, was not so disconcerting to Hagerty as the misunderstanding that resulted in the cancellation of one of the only three local practices that Georgetown can have before meeting tough Syracuse. Hagerty arrived at the Hilltop shortly before practice time (3:15) to find all bulletin boards decorated with "no practice today" notices.

When both of his assistants, roaring Mush Dubofsky and meek George Murtagh had disclaimed all knowledge of the affair and no evidence could be uncovered that pointed to the fiendish work of a Syracuse sabateur, Hagerty finally found the answer.

An assistant faculty moderator of athletics, not seeing Hagerty around at the usual time and remembering that the football team did not practice the Monday following last year's game with N. Y. U., posted the "no practice" announcements.

It Was an Error

What the unwitting moderator did not realize is that the 1939 N. Y. U. game was Georgetown's last of that season. Hence, no practice the next Monday. When the error was learned the moderator was horrified, and even volunteered to hurry down to the nearby drug store and to the theaters to round up the missing players who had not tarried after reading of their unexpected day of rest. The fellow was so humble and gracious about his error that he quickly won the forgiveness of Hagerty, who observed that perhaps the rest would do the boys good.

So, for the rest of the afternoon Hagerty, Murtagh and Dubofsky mapped strategy for the Syracuse game. Commanding considerable attention from the G. U. brain trust was one particular Syracuse play which both Cornell and Columbia were powerless to stop.

It is a fake reverse, operated from a punt formation and with an unbalanced line to the right. The quarterback fakes the ball to the tailback and then gives it to the bucking back, who plunges through center. Meantime the quarterback, with the assistance of a running guard, is mouse-trapping the defensive tackle.

Play Worked Before

Dubofsky reported that Syracuse, using this same play time after time without variation, marched 58 yards in a sustained march against the powerful Cornell line only to fumble and lose the ball on the Ithacans' 2-yard line. Likewise Syracuse used it to gain consistently against Columbia, though always halted short of a score.

Dubofsky also pointed out to Hagerty that Syracuse gave Cornell its toughest battle of the year and actually played the East's No. 1 team even in the first half though Cornell led, 13-6, at intermission. First downs in the first half were even, at six for each, and Syracuse wasted two real scoring chances. The second half was all Cornell, however, said Dubofsky, for after the Ithacans quickly pushed over a pair of touchdowns Syracuse folded.

Hardest hit by the injury epidemic was George Washington which expects to face Wake Forest here Friday night without the services of two outstanding backs, Ken Batson and Sam Babich. Catholic University is anxious over the condition of Joe Carrig, its best end who suffered a serious back injury. Maryland, idle this week, is frantically trying to get Joe Murphy and Mearle DuVall back into shape in time for the Georgetown game November 2.

Out at Catholic University the name of Pete Sachon is once again on everyone's lips. Not until today was it publicly known that Sachon played against West Virginia Wesleyan on a bad ankle—bandaged tightly—and despite that handicap averaged 44 yards on four kicks, according to Publicity Purveyor Eddie Reich, president of the "Sachon for All-American Club."

Reich's latest statistics on Sachon claim the 168-pound quarterback had averaged 47 yards on 34 kicks in four games, and completed 31 of 49 passes for an average of 11.7 yards gained per pass.

Carrig Will Be Back

X-rays yesterday quieted C. U.'s fears about Carrig, for it was shown that the lanky senior end did not sustain broken vertebrae, nor injure his kidney. He suffers a back sprain which may or may not keep him from C. U.'s game with St. Vincent's Sunday at Latrobe, Pa.

Should, as G. W. Coach Reinhart fears, both Batson and Babich miss the Wake Forest game with a separated shoulder and leg injury, respectively, the Colonials will be sorely handicapped.

Loss of Babich would especially be a blow to the Colonials who can replace Batson adequately with either Tom Grady or Ed Wiliamoski, but who haven't another really experienced quarterback to supplant him. Babich usually plays 60 minutes and is a fine blocker. Walter Wele probably will fill in for Babich.

Chevy Chase Pro-Senior Event Today

Invitation Field Day At Kenwood to Be Last Women's Tourney

Bob Barnett's Pro-Senior tournament today at Chevy Chase and the Women's Invitation Field Day at Kenwood are absolutely the closing, last and final weekday golf tournaments of the season here this year. At least, they are the last ones on schedule.

Jim Ferrier, the visitor from Australia, will play at Chevy Chase, while at least a score of Maryland, Virginia and District professionals will play as partners to the distinguished senior members of the club.

Barnett will be host to the pros and seniors at lunch during the tournament. Play will be total score, with handicaps to the seniors.

The field day of the Kenwood women's golf committee will bring to a close the women's competitive season. Gross and net prizes will be awarded in the 18-hole medal play handicap event.

Mrs. Robert A. Lacey will officially end her two-year reign as District Women's Golf Association president in an executive committee meeting Thursday at Columbia Country Club. The women golfers will turn to bowling next Tuesday as the big league opens at Silver Spring.

74.7 on 152 games reported. However, with the same scores and the same application of the win-or-lose forecasting checked against all other prognosticators and so-called experts we still lead the field. We're not proud, but we're still the best.

Consider some of the things that happened in last week's games—things that went against all dope, against the figures. Occidental, which has hung around the cellar all season, rose up to knock off Whittier, one of the circuit leaders, 7-6. The same thing happened when Vermont took New Hampshire, 33-13, when Lawrence took Coe, 32-12, when Wesleyan downed Amherst, 14-6, and Buffalo nosed out Connecticut, 7-6.

Without rhyme or reason were: Loyola of California, 20, College of Pacific, 0; Denton Teachers, 7, Sam Houston Teachers, 6; Arizont, 24, Oklahoma A. & M., 0; Brown, 9, Holy Cross, 6; Syracuse, 3, Columbia, 0; St Louis U., 21, Drake, 0; St. Mary's of California, 9, Fordham, 6; Furman, 40, Davidson, 7; Idaho, 0, Utah State, 0; Lehigh, 12, Hampden-Sydney, 7; Ohio Wesleyan, 0, Ohio University, 0; Tulsa, 7, T. Prize of the week was Rice, 13; Texts, 0. Arkansas surprised everybody with its 21-2 victory over Ole Miss, and Louisiana State scored early to beat Vanderbilt, 7-0. Tulane rolled out a "Frank Merriwell" finish with less than two minutes to play to beat North Carolina for the system.

Down in Virginia the experts took a terrible licking as Richmond dumped V. M. I., 9-6; William and Mary defeated Virginia, 13-7, and in the same neighborhood George Washington ran up an unexpectedly decisive 19-0 victory over favored West Virginia.

Bill Ackerman . . . on Fishing

In a letter from an angler who has fished this area for a period of 30 years is the statement: "Never has the fishing been so poor as this year . . . the trout caught on my boat can be counted on my fingers . . . the only solution I can give . . . there are too many pound nets in the bay . . . at the fish wharves there were several boats loaded with gray trout, some of which were not over 6 inches in length . . . such practice must be stopped or we will not have any sport fishing."

ACKERMAN

In regard to the poor season—about that there is little doubt, but next year is just around the corner now, and it is liable to be productive beyond the greatest expectations. Why not look forward to that? This season is just so much water under the bridge.

About the pounds, and the fault of the poor fishing traceable to them, we would like to point out that the Chesapeake Bay and tributary waters are one of the heaviest fished commercial areas in the country. As a matter of fact, there are more tons of food fishes taken from it per square mile than even the Georges Banks. One is landlocked and the other several hundred miles offshore. Some of these pound nets have been in the same places for more than 50 years. In Maryland waters there are some 600-odd, while down the Virginia shore the number runs to well above 2,000. They take millions of pounds of fish each year. To be exact, from 45,000,000 pounds to 60,000,000 pounds, according to whether the year is poor or one of plenty—80 per cent of the total poundage. Three-fourths of the 38,000 men employed in commercial fishing in the Chesapeake work on the pounds.

These men were following their calling before there was any sport fishing of any account, they have their rights. But for that matter, so do sport fishermen, whose dollar counts now to the same xtent as the total earned by market fishermen, but until the sports angler can show these men they can earn more catering to the sportsmen, he has no right to say they shall not continue to earn livelihood in the time-honored fashion.

Pound nets are wasteful, if the men who lift them do not sort at the right time. There are both kinds of crews in the bay. But more important right now, commercial men are realizing the need for conservation and that the sports angler has the same rights of ownership in these natural resources as they have. There is a movement under way now to correct wasteful practices—such as the small, undersized fish noticed on the wharves. But without adequate protection, which in the case of all species, should be a minimum size limit that would give them a chance to spawn at least once, commercial fishermen cannot be blamed for taking them so long as they have a market value.

They believe that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush in following such a practice, however, for, considering the poundage of small trout taken in nets this season, with the small prices, which, if left to attain maturity, would bring tenfold that amount in 1941 or 1942.

Sports anglers should organize if they are ever to get conservative practices that will make good fishing for all.

One Jest Beats Old Joe in Blackamoor Handicap at Empire

WinfreyMare Wins Fourth Straight Race

10,071 See Arcaro Ride to Victory; Lumiere 3d; Favorite Pays $6.10 Mutuel

By the Associated Press

Empire City Race Track, N. Y., Oct. 28.—One Jest, a mare that thrives on racing, carried young Bill Winfrey's silks to victory for the fourth straight time when she nosed out Old Joe, from the P. Andolino Stable, in the featured Blackamoor (Class D) Handicap here this sunny afternoon. Lumiere, representing the Railroad Stable, was third, two lengths behind.

One Jest won her three races at Jamaica and today, under 122 pounds, he gave favorite players their fourth success out of five races on the program that ushered in the last week of the New York racing season. The crowd of 10,071 was duly appreciative as the unusual number of favorites registered, according to the loud cheering. One Jest paid her backers $6.10 for $2 and Eddie Arcaro scored a double astride the game daughter of On Watch. The time for the mile and a sixteenth was 1:45 4-5.

The fans received more than their share of thrills today, with photo finishes the order, as in the headline number.

Arcaro bided his time on One Jest while Sun Mica and Milk Punch went out and battled for the lead. At the head of the stretch, One Jest and the slow-starting Old Joe had joined the two front runners and it was a pretty sight as the four horses straightened out for home as if harnessed. One Jest stuck her head in front at the eighth pole and Old Joe, disposing of the others, made it a nip and tuck duel to the end. Lumiere's rally made him an easy third.

Stocks Steady After Early Relapse; Shift in War Scene Chills Sentiment

New York, Oct. 28.—The stock market stumbled over foreign news today but steadied in the closing hour. After a downward drift during the greater part of the session, a little buying support came in at the last and initial losses running to a point or more were reduced. An assortment of modest gainers also was in evidence.

The early relapse was unaccompanied by any real selling and activity dwindled from the opening until the concluding period when there was a slight pick-up.

The Associated Press average of 60 issues was off .2 of a point at 44.8. Transfers amounted to 470,640 shares compared with 518,660 last Friday.

Market sentiment was chilled a bit, brokers said, by the extension of the European war to Greece and indications of a shift in the campaign by the Axis powers. Renewed nervousness over possible upsets in the Mediterranean, it was thought, tended to offset mild political cheer in Wall Street as well as a continuance of a good brand of business developments. At the same time, earnings reports again stressed the inroads taxes are making in corporation profits.

An officially estimated jump in this week's steel mill operations to another new top since the American Iron & Steel Institute began publication of the figure aided earlier soft steel shares. U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic and Youngstown Sheet ended only a trifle under water and Jones & Laughlin preferred held an advance of 4 points.

Sears Roebuck responded to an extra dividend declaration of $1.25, on top of the regular 75-cent payment, with a gain of ¾ at 78¾. The same extra was paid last December.

Improvement was retained by American Telephone, Goodyear, National Acme Texas Corporation, Phelps Dodge, Internationtl Harvester, Woolworth, American Can and Air Reduction.

On the offside were U. S. Rubber, Chrysler, General Motors, Allied Chemical, Johns-Manville, Anaconda, Kennecott, Santa Fe, Great Northern, Westinghouse, Dow Chemical, duPont, Western Union, General Electric, Douglas Aircraft and Montgomery Ward.

Bonds were uneven, as were commodities. Wheat at Chicago was up ¼ to ⅞ of a cent a bushel and corn down ¾ to up ¼. Cotton conceded 20 to 23 cents a bale.

Behind in the curb were Electric Bond & Share, American Gas, Jones & Laughlin, Bell Aircraft and International Petroleum. Minor plus signs were retained by American Cyanamid "B", Gulf Oil and Glen Alden Coal. Volume here was around 97,000 shares against 99,000 Friday.

Steel Production To Set New High

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—The steel industry will operate at 95.7 per cent of capacity this week, highest on record (since the institute started compiling figures in 1933) for the second week in a row, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today.

This represented an increase of .8 of 1 per cent from 94.9 per cent in the previous week. A month ago output was 92.6 per cent and a year ago 91 per cent.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Oct. 28 (AP).—Terminating a period of declining prices extending over three sessions, the wheat market today developed a general recovery movement that tadded almost a cent to blackboard quotations. Purchasing credited to dealers covering previous short sales and some consuming interests helped the recovery. Hostilities in the Balkans and threatened involvement of this crop-producing area created uncertainty but formed little concrete basis for market action.

Wheat closed near the best levels of the day, or ¼@¾ higher than Saturday. December, 85⅛@85¼; May, 83⅛@83¾; corn, ¼ off to ¼ up; December, 60⅝@60¾; May, 61¼; oats, ⅛@¼ higher; rye, ¼@¾ up; soybeans, 1¼@1¾ lower, and lard unchanged to 8 higher.

Rain also fell in parts of the corn belt where there were reports of slow drying out of ears. Corn sagged almost a cent at one stage, with December contracts the weakest, reflecting ½@¾ lower spot prices and increased offerings of new corn. Receipts totaled 481 cars and a latest portion of arrivals was put up for sale. Old No. 1 yellow was quoted up to 67½, while the basis for new No. 2 yellow was 4½@5¼ over December.

Boston, Oct. 28 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agri.).—Domestic wool was rather quiet on the Boston wool market today. Fine delaine, bright fleece wools were quoted at 44@45 cents, in the grease, but were mostly quiet as buyers were bidding these prices only on light shrinking lots. Asking prices were around 45@46 cents, in the grease, delivered to users for country-packed mixed lots of three-eighths and quarter blood bright fleeces but there was little demand at these asking prices. Medium cross-bred South American wools recently have been arriving in sizable amounts, and users are processing many of these wools for civilian goods.

New York Dry Goods

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Business in cotton goods today centered in specialty and industrial materials. Colder weather is expected to simulate activity in woolen piece goods. Spun Rayon cloth was in fair demand along with box loom fabrics. Silk goods moved slowly. Sales were reported on the basis of the following quotations for immediate delivery:

Print cloths, 38½-in. 64x60	8.35	5¼
Broadcloths, 39, 100x60	4.10	7
Sheetings, 37, 48x48	4.00	5⅞
Combed lawns, 40, 76x72	9.00	6½

London Stocks Depressed on War Extension

London, Oct. 28 (AP).—Security prices were marked down throughout the list and turnover contracted still further today when the market heard of extension of the war to Greece.

The "city" accepted calmly the creation of a new war zone, however, and the markdowns were described as "precautionary." Low prices for the day were substantially raised by the close in many cases.

British government bonds generally lost around ⅛ point.

Profit taking cut into the recently buoyant rail group. In the industrial division all divisions, with the exception of brewery stocks, lost ground.

An early downward trend to Kaffirs was accented by later sales from Cape Town.

Oils improved and Coppers held firm, the latter under the influence of a satisfactory earnings statement issued by Roan Antelope.

U. S. Employment In September at New 11-Year High

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Total employment in the United States rose to 48,104,000 workers in September, highest since October, 1929, when there were 49,033,000 employed, the National Industrial Conference Board said today.

The board added, however, the Nation's larbor force increased by more than 6,500,000 during the 11-year interval.

Unemployed workers declined to 6,829,000 in September from 7,698,000 in August, an 11 per cent drop, the board said. The sharp contraction brought the jobless to the lowest total since October, 1937, and represented a decline of 1,363,000 since September last year.

Normal seasonal trends in employment in manufacturing and construction work were upset as the National Defense Program got under way, the board said. An increase of 307,000 persons employed in agriculture was much greater than normal. Manufacturing claimed 348,000 more workers and construction 68,000.

'Moderate' Climb In Costs of Food Predicted in 1941

By the Associated Press

Consumers were advised by the Agriculture Department yesterday to expect a "moderate" increase in food costs during 1941.

Products mostly likely to increase, it said, are those consumed almost entirely in the American markets—meats, dairy and poultry products, some fruits and vegetables. The department said there were a number of economic and political factors operating to boost prices of things consumers require, both agricultural and industrial.

It listed those factors as improved consumer demand as a result of the defense program; prospects for increased Government purchase of food and clothing for the armed forces, and indications that 1941 crop production may be smaller than in 1940.

The military training program was seen as price stimulating inasmuch as the percapita consumption of food in the armed forces was said to be about 40 per cent greater than in civilian life.

The department predicted that prices of those farm commodities largely dependent on world markets—such as cotton, wheat, tobacco, rice, some fats and oils—probably would not be very different in 1941 from 1940, because the war had closed important European markets.

Du Pont Reduces Nylon Yarn Price

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—A general price reduction on all Nylon yarns, the synthetic textile commercially introduced in January, was announced today by E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co.

The price changes were "made in accordance with the desire to reduce prices on products as volume increases and manufacturing improvements are achieved," the company explained.

Reduction on hosiery yarns ranged from 17 to 32 cents a pound, according to weight, and brought the price level to $3-$3.95 a pound.

In 101 leading cities, the gain in the week ended October 23 was $24,000,000. In the last four weeks, the gain in these cities has amounted to $171,000,000, and brought the total of business loans in these centers to $4,746,000,000. This was $454,000,000 more than a year ago. New York banks, as usual, led the increases with $18,000,000.

Cotton Futures

New York, Oct. 28 (AP).—Cotton futures dipped a little further today in continuation of a down trend started last Wednesday. Final quotations were 4 to 5 points lower.

Reports from the South indicated an easier spot basis and a decline in spot sales. Consequently merchants who have been building up stocks have more cotton to be hedged in the futures market.

Worth street brokers reported fair business, concentrated chiefly in specialty items and industrial cloths. Prices were steadily maintained.

Exports Saturday, 13,881 bales; season so far, 282,084. Port receipts, 25,646. Port stocks, 2,995,991.

Allegany Corp. Deal Attacked By Senate Unit

$3,000,000 Stock Purchase in 1931 Called Speculation

The Senate Railroad Finance Committee asserted yesterday that a 1931 purchase of more than $3,000,000 of Kansas City Southern Railway stock by the Chicago Great Western Railroad constituted a "wasteful speculation by a railroad already on the brink of bankruptcy."

"Legislation is urgently needed," the committee said in one of a series of reports, "to end such wastes of railroad money in outside stock adventures."

The committee said that Alleghany Corporation and Bremo Corporation played the major roles in the stock purchase. The former was the top holding company in the Van Sweringen railroad system, while the latter controlled the Great Western.

"As the result of demand loans previously made but of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad treasury," the committee said, "the Allegany interests held the Bremo interests in a financial vise, and the latter controlled the Chicago, Great Western.

"Thus, when Alleghany wanted to get rid of its Kansas City Southern holdings, and at the same time retain a leverage on them, it was in

Signs Noted Of 'Spiritual Awakening'

Dr. Clark Opens Preaching Mission At District Church

Signs of "a spiritual awakening in America" were pointed out yesterday by Dr. Glenn Clark, of St. Paul, Minn., professor and Presbyterian layman, who opened a preaching mission at the First Congregational Church on the theme, "How to Pray in a Day Like This."

As one of the most hopeful signs, he cited "a definite trend toward the coming together of the great spiritual minds" of various denominations. He said he regarded this growing accord as more significant, at present, than would be a merging of "the outer churches."

"We are on the verge of a spiritual awakening in this country. If we miss it, we're in for an awful hard time," he said in an interview just before his afternoon address.

Dr. Clark has conducted a "prayer laboratory" at three summer camps which he has established in New Hampshire, Minnesota and California. In the laboratory, personal problems and internatoinal issues are "laid on the table" and "we wrestle with each to get the right hold to throw it," he said.

He may conduct a "prayer laboratory" here toward the end of his twice-daily series of addresses at the church at Tenth and G Streets Northwest. Each day through Friday he speaks at 4:45 and 7:45 p. m. on prayer or some other phase of spiritual life.

Dr. Clark is professor of creative religious living at Macalester College in St. Paul and has written several books on religious topics.

There are more entries of organized bodies than for any of the 21 annual parades. Four groups with over 40 in line in elaborate dress have also entered the parade.

Hitler 'Spreads Butter Too Thin,' Says Historian

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 21 (AP). The English, in the opinion of James Truslow Adams, will win the "war of nerves."

The historian and Pulitzer prize winner said:

"The nerves of the English won't crack until long after those of the Germans.

"What ruined Napoleon was the conquering of too many countries and the spreading of his butter too thin. In each country he left more discontentment than in the past. The same will happen to Hitler."

Adams came here yesterday with his wife and R. V. Coleman for a short stay at the Farmington Country Club. Coleman is managing editor of the "Dictionary for American History," of which Adams is editor in chief.

Md. Bank Clerk Admits $15,300 Embezzlement

Baltimore, Oct. 28 (AP).—William E. Fleischmann, 32-year-old discount clerk at the National Central Bank here, pleaded guilty today of embezzling $15,300 of the bank's funds.

Fleischmann, father of two children, told United States Commissioner James K. Cullen the money "just dribbled out" in his ordinary living expenses "over three or four years."

Questioned by Cullen, who ultimately released him in $2,500 bail for Federal grand jury action, Fleischmann said his salary had been $2,000 a year, that he now had none of the $15,300 left, but that it had not been spent in "gambling or high living."

The clerk surrendered through his attorney shortly after John J. Ghingher, president of the bank, swore out a warrant for his arrest. Fleischmann said he had worked at the bank since 1928.

Murder Trial Opens in Auto Death of Two

Nestlerode Case Expected to Run Week; 40 Witnesses Excused

Richard S. Nestlerode, 26, went on trial before Justice James W. Morris in the District Court yesterday on two charges of second-degree murder, for the deaths of two pedestrians alleged to have been killed by his speeding automobile last June 22.

Pointing out that the trial probably will take a week, Assistant District Attorney B. Caldwell obtained the court's permission to excuse the more than 40 Government witnesses. They will be spared days of waiting in the corridors of the crowded courthouse, where there are not even chairs for them, and will be called back in groups, as they are needed.

Those killed were Mrs. Edna Mitchell, 34, colored, and Joseph Nappo, 57, 1250 Tenth Street Northwest.

Nestlerode, who is defended by Attorneys Levi H. David and J. Benjamin Simmons, told the police he lost consciousness while driving his car and "woke up" some time later, after his car was pursued at 65 miles an hour through Saturday afternoon traffic. Nestlerode said he knew nothing of the accidents.

Contract Bridge

A husband and wife team that wins Manhattan duplicates frequently, took "top" by a fluke on this hand which they played at a part-score at clubs, having only seven trumps, and succeeded by a cross-ruff in making five-odd. Strangely enough, they can't make five-odd at their longer suit, diamonds, being forced to lose two clubs and a trump trick against good defense.

The cards:

	♠ Q 9 5 ♡ 10 6 5 4 3 2 ◇ A ♣ A 7 3
♠ 8 6 3 2 ♡ A K J 8 ◇ J 5 3 ♣ 9 6	WEST NORTH EAST SOUTH	♠ K 7 4 ♡ Q 9 7 ◇ Q 9 2 ♣ K J 5 2
	♠ A J 10 ♡ none ◇ K 10 8 7 6 4 ♣ Q 10 8 4

Writes L. H. C., the husband in the case: "Amy held the South cards, was dealer and passed. West passed. North bid one heart; East passed; South bid two diamonds; West passed; North bid two hearts; East passed; South bid three clubs; all passed. I held the South cards and just between 'us girls,' I do not think a whole lot of my bidding. However, the interesting feature of this hand is, as I see it, that with the opening of the king of hearts, North made five clubs without difficulty."

Listen!
with Glynn

A gentleman name of Bob Trout, who's something of a peerless ace when it comes to ad lib description over the radio, is to be on hand at the Inter-Departmental Auditorium in Washington today to bring WJSV and Columbia network listeners an impression of the sights and sounds that attend the Nation's first peacetime draft lottery.

It can safely be said that Mr. Trout will take a pretty personal interest in the proceedings as Secretary of War Stimson dips into the historic "goldfish bowl" used for the World War draft and picks out the first number. For Mr. Trout just reached the age of 32 a few days ago, which makes him just as eligible as 17,000,000 other young men throughout the country to have his number be the first one chosen.

The lottery broadcast will begin at noon, with a brief address by President Roosevelt. WJSV and CBS will be on the air with the preliminary drawings until 12:45 p. m. At 3:45 p. m. Columbia plans to bring you interviews with the young men who have been selected.

Albert Warner, CBS's Washington commentator, is to bring you comprehensive reports on the progress of the historic ceremonies in his 6:45 p. m. and 10:45 p. m. news shows. At 10:15 p. m. Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, of the National Selective Service Board, will give a review from WJSV on the day's activities while the lottery is still going on—it's expected to last 14 or 15 hours.

Rep. Randolph Defends Cost Of Airport

Project as First Planned Was Smaller Than Final One, He Explains

By James D. Secrest

Chairman Randloph of the House District Committee yesterday came to the defense of the Washington National Airport the cost of which has been assailed recently on the House and Senate floors.

Citing an attack by Representative Holmes (Republican), of Massachusetts, as typical of "criticisms of a partisan nature," Randolph in a statement prepared for the Congressional Record appendix said:

"The gentleman from Massachusetts is quoted as saying that the new Washington National Airport at Gravelly Point will cost $16,000,000 as against an engineering estimate of less than $5,000,000. This, he purports to describe, as typical of WPA projects which return but a dollar of value for every three dollars spent.

"The first misstatement is as to the cost of Gravelly Point. The gentleman is only $3,000,000 out of the way on that. Its total cost will be $13,000,000—not $16,000,000."

First Project Was Smaller

The "engineering estimate," Randolph explained, was on a project "just about one-third the capacity of the present magnificent field. It was made to meet the demands of civil aviation as it stood three years ago. It is true that engineers then set a cost of some $4,700,000 for the then development."

This project, considered by the Washington Airport Commission in 1937, was to have covered only 500 acres as against the present 729 acres.

"The earlier project," he said, "provided a field but 10 feet above mean low water and thus subject to periodic floods. The present field is at an average elevation of 14 feet and more than a foot above any known flood that can be contemplated by the engineers for a period of 235 years."

The runways are much longer than originally planned, he pointed out, because of the development of blind landing and the increase in size and speed of transport planes. The airport has 30 per cent more square yards of runways than had the first plan and three times as many aprons and taxiways.

Terminal Space Rented

The cost of the terminal building, Randolph said, is $1,500,000 as against $650,000 for a terminal building and two hangars in the 1937 plan "for the soundest of business reasons."

"Leases covering every square foot of the terminal building have been signed," he added, "at a rate comparable to those for the best business properties in Washington, a rate that will assure the payment of all expenses and proper amortization of the cost."

The "engineering estimate" for the present field, Randolph said, was $10,800,000, as recommended to the President August 22, 1938. The project kept within this estimate with one exception, he added, and that was in the enlargement of the terminal building.

"Air traffic growth indicated the absolute necessity," he continued," of a terminal building far larger than originally planned. And, though it was far costlier, the increased cost is already justified by the rentals at adequate return already signed an delivered."

Although only one hangar was provided in the $10,500,000 estimate, Congress this year appropriated $2,500,000 for five additional hangars because of the demands for space from the three air lines which will use the field.

3,500 Men Employed

Randolph said 3,500 men were employed at WPA wages in building the airport, which he termed a model and vital to national defense.

He cited figures to show how commercial air traffic has grown within recent years. InI 1938 there were 24,888 scheduled arrivals and departures of planes carrying 125,814 passengers in and out of Washington's airport. In 1939 there were 33,326 planes and 151,905 passengers. The estimate for 1940 in 42,364 planes and 205,300 passengers.

"Fees and rentals from airlines and returns from concessionaires on a percentage basis already assure an annual revenue at an initial minimum rate of $425,000," Randolph concluded.

"That is upward of 3 per cent on the money the Government invested. If ever there were a project of which the WPA and the Nation could be proud of for many reasons it is the Washington National Airport."

West New York, N. J., Oct. 28 (AP).—Mayor Frank Hague, of Jersey City, vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee, tonight told a party rally that record-breaking throngs which greeted President Roosevelt earlier in the day on his trip across northern New Jersey indicated he would "again win a sweeping victory in New Jersey and the Nation."

White Oak Is Believed Ghost of Slain Woman

Madisonville, Ky. (AP).—Nature and legend have built this monument to Mandy Holloman, a Negro woman dead 24 years.

The white oak stands just outside Madisonville where, if you believe in ghost stories, a "ha'nt" keeps silent vigil. The foliage forms a perfect image of Mandy's head.

The woman was slain by a bullet near the tree and her death never has been solved. Legend insists she planted it and died while caring for it. When the moon is just right to cast a silhouette scores of Kentuckians drive here to see the tree.

Death Takes A. D. Frank, 87, Sales Veteran

Former Hat Shop Owner Sold Topper To President Grant

Abraham D. Frank, whose long career as a clothing salesman was highlighted by the sale of a high silk hat to President Grant, died yesterday at the age of 87 at a local nursing home.

MR. FRANK

Mr. Frank, a native of Baltimore and a salesman for a Baltimore clothing manufacturer for many years, had made his home in Washington for 18 years, with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert J. Rich, 3526 Buchanan Street Northwest.

It was when he was operating a hat store in the old Metropolitan Hotel on Pennsylvania Avenue that President Grant walked in, unannounced, to buy a hat, relatives recalled yesterday. They said that Mr. Frank waited on the President with so little stir that his brother, the late M. D. Frank, did not know of the distinguished customer until his departure.

After the period of business here, Mr. Frank returned to Baltimore. He retired as a salesman there about 20 years ago. He came to Washington to live in his daughter's home, after the death of his wife, the former Pauline Hart, of Washington.

As an active member of the Brotherhood of the Washington Hebrew Congregation, he was interested in the Big Brother movement.

In addition to his daughter, survivors are two sisters, Mrs. Max Skutch and Mrs. Eleazer Cohen, both of Baltimore, and two grandsons, Herbert J. Rich, jr., and Frank Hart Rich.

Funeral services will be held in Baltimore at 11 a. m. tomorrow at the Mitchell funeral home, with burial to Baltimore Hebrew Congregation Cemetery.

10 Home Health 'Musts' Laid Down By U. S. Service

The United States Public Health Service Sunday listed te- "musts" of a healthful home environment. They are:

Sufficient ventilation, heat and light.

Space enough for ordinary family demands.

Screening against flies and mosquitoes.

Protection against other insects and rodents.

Protection against fire hazards and other accident risks.

Adequate play space and sunshine for children.

Not only the individual family but the community should become more "house conscious," according to Miss Mary J. Dunn, nursing consultant who drafted the ten housing commandments for the Public Health Service.
